PREFACE.

THE present edition of the Philippic Orations of Demosthenes aims to meet the wants of the American student. The text is that of the Zürich edition (in Baiter and Sauppe's Oratores Attici), from which, except in matters of orthography and punctuation not affecting the sense, only a single departure has been admitted; to this, which occurs in Phil. II, 12, attention is called in the Notes. The Introduction follows in its main features, and occasionally in its phraseology, the Introduction given by Rehdantz, in his edition of the Philippics; for the most part, however, it has been re-written, in especial reliance upon Schæfer's Demosthenes und seine Zeit. The historical portions are designed to furnish the student who is already familiar with the outlines of Greek History with such additional information as will enable him to understand the historical allusions in the accompanying orations. Sections 61-2, based upon Blass's Attische Beredtsamkeit, Bd. III, call attention to certain points which are not brought out in ordinary accounts of Demosthenes. Anything in the way of a general sketch of Greek oratory, or of a special characterization of Demosthenes, seems unnecessary in a work like the present, in view of the accessibility of Jebb's Primer of Greek Literature. In the preparation of the Notes, the freest use has been made of all available helps, especially the annotations of Sauppe, Franke, Westermann, Rehdantz, and Heslop. The Analyses are, in the main, taken from Blass's Attische Beredtsamkeit.

The Editor will be grateful for suggestions or corrections of any sort.

INTRODUCTION.

The Spartan Hegemony.

HE Athenian Hegemony, established about 477 B.C., and upheld and strengthened until the outbreak of the Peloponnesian War in 431, had, at the conclusion of that war in 404, fallen to pieces (ix. 23). The long struggle with Sparta had reduced Athens to abject weakness. Without allies, without ships, without Long Walls, her treasury and her citizens impoverished. Athens became for several years a cipher in the general politics of Greece. Sparta, on the other hand, now entered on a career of supremacy. Her control over the coasts and islands of the Ægean was secured by overthrowing the existing governments of the cities, and creating in each an oligarchy of ten citizens, called a dekarchy or dekadarchy, subservient to the Spartan policy, and supported by a Spartan harmost and garrison. With these tools at her disposal, Sparta exercised over the Greek world an oppression which was soon felt to be intolerable.

Effective resistance to this oppression began at Thebes. 2 In 395 this state became involved in hostilities with Sparta, and Athens, now somewhat revived, was easily induced to join the struggle against her hated conqueror. At the instance of the Thebans she sent into Bœotia a force of hoplites and cavalry, which, to be sure, arrived at Haliartus just after the Thebans had won a decided victory over one Spartan army, but which did material service to the cause by completing the discouragement of the remaining Spartan troops, and so causing their hasty retreat into the Peloponnesus (iv. 17). Encouraged by the success of these efforts, Thebes, Athens, Corinth, and Argos now combined against Sparta in a war, which, from being carried on mainly in Corinthian territory, was called the Corinthian War. Of the Athenian generals who figured in this contest, Polystratus, Iphikrates, Chabrias, and others, Iphikrates was the most prominent, distinguishing himself by the state of efficiency to which he brought his army of Athenians and mercenaries, and especially by his exploit, long remembered by the Athenians with extreme pride, of annihilating a Spartan mora, or division of 600 men, at Lechæum (iv. 23-4).

The Corinthian War dragged along indecisively for several 3 years, until, in 387, the Spartan Antalkidas succeeded in inducing the King of Persia to impose peace upon the Greek world. The Peace of Antalkidas nominally secured autonomy to every Greek State, except that the islands of Lemnos, Imbros, and Skyros, which had been acquired by Athens about a century before, were suffered to remain as portions of Athenian territory (iv. 27, 32, 34); but actually the Spartans, who were entrusted with the execution of the terms of the Peace, made use of it to maintain their own ascendency. Their despotic hold upon the Greek cities was not relaxed until, in 379, the expulsion by the Thebans of the Spartan garrison which had for three years occupied their citadel, gave the signal for a general revolt. Athens at once exerted herself to establish a new maritime confederacy, having for its object resistance to the hated oppression of Sparta. She renounced all interference with the domestic affairs of her allies, even promising that her citizens should not be permitted to acquire property in the territory of any member of the confederation; the allies were all to stand on an equal footing, and their common interests to be cared for by a Federal Diet sitting in Athens; finally, the pecuniary contributions needed were fixed at a moderate figure, and called by a new name, - syntaxis instead of phoros, -in order to avoid the associations which had gathered around the latter word in the Confederacy of Delos. Founded on these just and mutually satisfactory terms, the new confederacy came, by the year 373, to number upwards of seventy cities, chiefly on the coasts and islands of the Ægean, but including also Thebes. The strength of the league was turned against Sparta in the so-called Bœotian War, and the naval victory of Naxos, won by the Athenian commander, Chabrias, over the Spartans in 376, may be regarded as marking the downfall of the Spartan Hegemony (ix. 23). It was, however, reserved for the Thebans, now dissociated from the Athenian confederacy, to inflict upon the Spartans at Leuktra, in 371, that crushing defeat which reduced them thenceforth to the third place among the states of Greece.

Greece at Philip's Accession.

In Beeotia, the Peace of Antalkidas, so long as it was ob- 5 served, had maintained the several communities in independence of one another, but within a few years after the uprising in 379, Thebes had succeeded, by dint of destroying cities hostile to herself, as Platæa and Thespiæ, in uniting the whole district under her own headship. The victory at Leuktra raised this unified Bœotia to the rank of a widely influential state (ix. 23). Under the guidance of the great general and statesman Epaminondas, the Thebans extended their authority over the adjacent districts, - Phokis, Lokris, Malis, Eubœa, most of Thessaly, etc. They even pushed their influence into the Peloponnesus. Here the Arcadians, who had long been submissive allies of Sparta, were organized into an anti-Spartan confederacy, dependent upon Thebes. Messenia was torn from Laconia, and made an independent state. Other Peloponnesian states made common cause with Thebes. And though with the death of Epaminondas, in 362, Thebes declined in influence, she remained without dispute the strongest continental power in Greece.

- Athens, too, maintained and extended her maritime power between 371 and 357. During this period Samos was successfully besieged, treated as an Athenian possession, and occupied by Athenian kleruchs; the region round the Thermaic Gulf, including the important towns of Pydna, Potidæa, and Methone, was captured (iv. 4), and to Potidæa Athenian kleruchs were sent (vi. 20); and other acquisitions were made. And, in 357, when some of the Eubœan cities (see § 5) got into difficulties with Thebes, and applied to Athens for help, the Athenians, with a promptitude and energy rare for that generation, sent thither a force which rescued the threatened cities, and brought the whole island under Athenian control (iv. 17).
  - But though, at the moment of Philip's accession, Athens presented an outward show of prosperity and power, events soon showed that she was unfit to grapple with a strong and determined enemy. In comparison with the Age of Pericles, the Age of Demosthenes was an age of decline in political wisdom and prudence, in patriotism, in vigor, — a declinenot peculiar to Athens among the states of Greece, but most striking there, because of the greater prominence of the city and the greater things expected of her. Thus, whereas in the fifth century, B.C., the Athenians had been forward to risk their lives in military service, in the fourth century they were extremely reluctant to undergo its hardships, and put forth its Hence the employment of mercenaries (ξένοι) became more and more common. "There arose (as in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries in modern Europe) Condottieri like Charidemus and others, — generals having mercenary bands under their command, and hiring themselves out to any prince or potentate who would employ and pay them. Of these armed rovers, - poor, brave, desperate, and held by no civic ties, - Isocrates makes repeated complaint, as one of the most serious misfortunes of Greece." (Grote, Hist. Greece, vol. xi., p. 393.) And whereas at the beginning of the century the mercenaries employed by Athens in the Corinthian War had been only an adjunct to the citizen force (see § 2), it had become common by the middle of the century to entrust military expeditions entirely to mercenaries (iv. 24), while the citizens remained at home. Even the generals and other army-officers shared the prevailing aversion to taking the field, and all but one of the number habitually staid in Athens, content with figuring there in festival-day processions (iv. 26).

Not only, however, were the military undertakings of Ath- 8 ens entrusted to mercenaries, but these mercenaries were only irregularly and insufficiently paid. As the Theôric Fund (see § 51) absorbed all the money of the public treasury not needed for other peace expenses, and as the Athenians were unwilling to relinquish or reduce this Fund, the necessary means for paying an army could be raised only by the unpopular method of a direct property-tax. To this method they were slow to resort; and the general in command, not receiving from Athens the wages-money due and promised to his soldiers, might neglect the object for which he had been sent out, and cruise about the Ægean, forcing contributions from helpless allies (iv. 24, 45); or he might even enter temporarily into the service of some foreign power which promised to reward him well; as, in the midst of the Social War (see § 10), the Athenian general Chares, without authorization from home, entered into the service of Artabazos, the revolted satrap of Daskylium (iv. 24). It is no great wonder that, in such a state of things as this, the generals came to feel estranged from their city, or that, on the other hand, politicians at home, ignorant of military affairs, brought frequent and often wholly undeserved charges of high treason against the generals (iv. 47).

It would, indeed, be a mistake to represent the Athens 9 of the Age of Demosthenes as making only small sacrifices in war. Her total outlay in men and money was great. But her efforts were fitful, tardy, inefficient. Again and again, owing to lack of previous preparation and of proper energy, costly expeditions arrived at their destinations too late to do any thing (see §§ 17, 18, 21). And it was only in exceptional crises (see §§ 6, 22) that the Athenians could throw off their apathy and act in a manner worthy of their forefathers.

The Social War.

10 The Athenian confederacy became in twenty years unpopular, for Athens did not long maintain the spirit of justice in which she had organized that league. Her allies became alarmed at her self-aggrandizing schemes, exhibited in the acquisition of territory for her private advantage (see § 6), and they became indignant at the treatment which they received from her generals (see § 8). On these grounds all the larger members of the confederacy except Eubœa and Lesbos, viz., Chios, Kos, Rhodes, and Byzantium, revolted in 357. Thus began the Social War, in which Athens made. feeble efforts to bring back the seceding states, and which ended in 355 with the recognition of their independence. Not only, therefore, was the attention of Athens partly diverted from Philip during the first years of his aggressions, but the public treasury was reduced by the loss of a considerable part of the contributions from allies. Thus doubly did the Social War favor the cause of Macedon.

Progress of Philip from 359 to 351.

Down to the time of Philip, Macedonia was a state of small political importance. The mass of its people, though seemingly of a race akin to the Greeks, had had throughout the historic period no community of development with the Greeks. Rude and fierce, they were accounted barbarians by the Greeks, and despised accordingly. Not so the Macedonian kings. These, according to a generally accredited tradition, were genuine Hellenes. It was believed, and perhaps it was true, that in pre-historic times, say in the eighth century, B.C., an Argive family had settled in Macedonia, and acquired sovereignty there; and that from this family the subsequent-line of kings was descended.

These kings gradually extended their frontiers, and some 12 of them made efforts to introduce Greek culture; but, until the time of Philip, they did not succeed in building up a strong nation. The country was a prey to intestine feuds, especially on the occasion of the death of a king; for, in the absence of any recognized law of royal succession, such an occasion was the signal for bloody struggles between the several claimants to the throne. So it was at the death of Perdikkas III, 13 in 359. Among the various competitors at the time, one was Perdikkas's brother Philip, then in the twenty-third year of his age. He had spent some years at Thebes as a hostage, where he had had opportunity to familiarize himself with Greek culture, and to study the arts of government and war. During the last few years of his brother's reign he had held vice-regal command over a province of the kingdom, and had thus acquired a military force of some importance. On the throne's becoming vacant, he promptly asserted his claims, and, by virtue of his superior sagacity and vigor, rapidly disposed of his rivals. Once fairly established at home, he proceeded to deal with the Pæonian and Illyrian tribes that harassed his northern and north-western borders. The Pæonians were reduced to a state of quiescence and submission, and the Illyrians, who had pushed into north-western Macedonia in considerable numbers, were driven back beyond Mt. Pindus.

Macedonia was still without seaboard. The cities about 14 the Thermaic Gulf owned allegiance to Athens (see § 6). The Chalkidian peninsula was dotted with upwards of thirty Greek cities, now united into a confederacy of which Olynthus was the head. Farther east, near the mouth of the river Strymon, stood the city of Amphipolis, which, founded by the Athenians in 437, and prized as an invaluable possession on account of its commanding position and rapidly acquired strength, had been lost to them twelve years later, and, spite of constant hopes and repeated efforts, never recovered. Athens, then, the Olynthian confederacy, and Amphipolis shut Philip in from the sea.

- 15 It was in connection with Amphipolis that the tricky and ambitious policy of Philip first became manifest. At the outset of his reign, in making overtures to the Athenians for an alliance, he renounced all pretensions to the possession of that city, to which, however, after having secured his northern and western frontiers, he laid siege, in 357. The Amphipolitans then sent envoys to Athens to implore aid. Compliance with this suit would, in all probability, have enabled Athens, with little effort and in the most amicable way, to regain her much-coveted colony. But simultaneously with the envoys came a letter from Philip, in which he recognized the justice. of the Athenian claims to Amphipolis, and promised to surrender it to Athens on its capture. These delusive assurances were listened to. Philip prosecuted the siege unhindered, and effected the reduction of the place in the same year, partly through the aid of traitors within the walls. Thus he acquired a town of great value as a seaport, as commanding the pass over the lower Strymon into Thrace, and as opening the way to the rich gold and silver mines of Mt. Pangæum. To relinquish to Athens a position of such importance was far from being in Philip's plans.
- 16 The fate of Amphipolis alarmed the neighboring Olynthians, who, during or immediately after the siege just mentioned, sent envoys to Athens to conclude an alliance against Philip. Such an alliance might have proved the salvation of Greece, but the Athenians rejected it. They were still disposed to maintain friendly relations with Philip, and secret negotiations were now on foot, looking to the exchange of Amphipolis for Pydna. Instead, however, of making this exchange, Philip proceeded to take Pydna, in 357, by force of arms. Here, as at Amphipolis, he had the co-operation of a party of traitors, who threw open to him their gates. From this time until 346 Athens and King Philip were in a state of mutual hostility.

The Olynthians having been repulsed by Athens in their 17 offer of alliance, Philip found it possible and convenient to secure for a time their friendship. This he purchased by the cession of Anthemus (vi. 20), whose position made it a desirable member of the Olynthian confederacy; and also by promising to recover for them the neighboring town of Potidæa, which had been taken from them a few years before by Athens (see § 6). This promise was promptly made good. Potidæa was attacked in 356, and though the Athenians sent aid, it arrived too late (iv. 35). The Athenian kleruchs in the place were allowed to return to Athens; the other inhabitants were sold into slavery; the city was destroyed, and its territory incorporated with that of Olynthus (vi. 20).

During the following two years or so, Philip's activity was 18 mainly spent in successful struggles with the Thracians, Pæonians, and Illyrians, among the last named of whom he is said to have founded strongholds for his own use (iv. 48). But in 353 he attacked Methone, the last remaining possession of Athens on the Thermaic Gulf. Again, as in the case of Potidæa, the armament sent out by the Athenians arrived too late (iv. 35). With the capture of Methone, Philip had excluded Athens forever from the Macedonian coast. With the exception of the Chalkidian peninsula, the whole country from Mt. Olympus to the river Nestus was now under Macedonian rule, and the king was ready for aggressive interference in the midst of Greece itself.

An opportunity soon presented itself. The year 355, which 19 had witnessed the conclusion of the Social War, had witnessed the outbreak in Greece of another intestine feud, the so-called (Second) Sacred War. The parties to the Sacred War were, on the one hand, Phokis, which, since the battle of Leuktra, had been paying unwilling allegiance to Thebes (see § 5), and on the other, Thebes, with the remainder of her allies. The Phokians secured the nominal alliance of Athens and Sparta, but they received little material aid from abroad. Their main strength came from the temple of Delphi, whose vast treasures they appropriated, at first with the intention of making ultimate restitution, but afterwards as unblushing spoilers. This wealth enabled them to collect a mercenary force formidable enough to give them the advantage over their enemies. The 353 they occupied Thermopylæ, a strategic position of immense importance, as the sole and impregnable pass between 20 Northern and Central Greece. They even extended their in-

- 20 Northern and Central Greece. They even extended their influence into Thessaly. Here the two joint tyrants of Pheræ were struggling, like their predecessors for fifty years back, to gain undisputed mastery over all Thessaly. With these tyrants the Phokians allied themselves, while the anti-Pheræan party called in the assistance of Philip. At first the Phokians proved more than a match for the king, defeating him in 353 in two battles; but on his return in the spring of 352 they were themselves overwhelmingly defeated, and lost all footing in Thessaly. The tyrants of Pheræ had to fly from
- 21 before Philip (vi. 22). Pagasæ, the port of Pheræ, on the Pagasæan Gulf, was then besieged by him. The siege was long enough to admit of sending to Athens for aid, and an expedition for the purpose was actually despatched by Athens, but was once again too late (iv. 35). Philip appropriated this valuable harbor, as also the district of Magnesia, and became, in fact, virtual master of all Thessaly. The famous Thessalian cavalry was now at his service; his revenues were augmented by Thessalian customs duties; and the possession of another seaport with its shipping greatly increased his capacity for doing mischief on sea. It is now that we begin to hear of his cruisers as plundering the commerce of the Athenian allies, and as committing depredations at Lemnos and Imbros, at Geræstus, and even at Marathon itself (iv. 34). Worst of all, his proximity to Eubœa made it convenient for him to foment by written communications dissatisfaction in that island (iv. 37).

After securing his position in Thessaly, Philip marched 22 towards Thermopylæ, which was still held by the Phokians. This was a movement most threatening to Athens, and the Athenians were not insensible to their danger. With a promptitude worthy of their best days, they despatched by sea a force, chiefly or wholly citizens, which put the pass in such a state of defense that Philip thought it prudent to retire (iv. 17). For the present, Thermopylæ remained the safeguard of Central Greece.

Repulsed in this quarter, Philip suddenly appeared, in the 23 autumn of the same year (352), in the neighborhood of the Thracian Chersonese, an Athenian possession of great value. He allied himself with Perinthus and Byzantium (ix. 34), gained influence among the Thracian tribes, and laid siege to Heræon Teichos, near the Chersonese. In alarm for the safety of the peninsula, the Athenians voted to raise sixty talents of money, and to despatch at once forty triremes, manned with Athenian citizens (iv. 41). But Philip presently fell sick, and rumors of this, and even of his death (iv. 11), arriving at Athens before the expedition could be got under way, the Athenians subsided into inactivity. Such was the state of affairs when, in the spring of 351, Demosthenes delivered his First Philippic.

Life of Demosthenes from 383 to 351.

The story of Demosthenes's early life is a story of wrongs 24 suffered and avenged. Born in 383, the son of a wealthy manufacturer, named also Demosthenes, the future orator became an orphan at the age of seven. The elder Demosthenes left behind him a property, large for those times, of about fourteen talents, the bulk of which was entrusted to three guardians for his son. But instead of doubling this property by careful management, as they might well have done, the guardians, in spite of protestations and appeals, criminally squandered it, so that, on becoming of age at the beginning of his eighteenth year, the son and heir received little more than a talent of his inheritance. Shy in manners, and far from robust in health, the young Demosthenes was animated by an intense sense of his wrongs, and with unbounded energy and perseverance sought to redress them. Having fitted himself for his task by a course of instruction under Isæus, the most eminent lawyer of his day, he spent more than five years --- such were the opportunities for shifts and evasions afforded to rogues by the Attic courts - in prosecuting the guardians; and though he seems never to have recovered more than a small part of the money which was his due, he succeeded in abundantly vindicating the justice of his cause.

This experience left a lasting impress upon his life, not only 25 by intensifying his hatred of wrong and desire to right it, but also by determining the career upon which he should enter. He became a logographos, or composer of speeches for the use of litigants in the dikasteries. And though this profession had been brought into disrepute by the unscrupulousness of many who followed it, there is nothing to show that it ever induced Demosthenes to stoop to any thing dishonorable. At first he devoted himself to civil cases only, but in a few years he began to take up public cases, or cases conducted in the interest of the state. These introduced him into the field of politics. Four speeches in public suits, viz., those Against Androtion, Against Leptines, Against Timokrates, and Against Aristokrates, of which only the one Against Leptines was delivered by the author himself, belong to the years 355-352.

During this period Demosthenes also made his appearance 26 as a parliamentary orator. He addressed the ecclesia for the first time in 354, in an oration On the Symmories, and again in 353, in an oration For the Megalopolitans. The First Philippic probably belongs to the spring of the year 351. There was at the time no special emergency to be met, but the general subject of the war with Macedonia coming up for discussion, as it had often done before, Demosthenes came forward to advise the adoption of measures more efficient than those which had been previously employed. His main recommendation was that a standing force, consisting not of mercenaries only, but of mercenaries and citizens, should be organized and kept in the neighborhood of the Macedonian coast, for the purpose of harassing Philip. This recommendation he urged with arguments and appeals, and with a scorn for the languid policy of his countrymen which in after years he learned to express with somewhat more of moderation (iv. 51). The First Philippic "is not merely a splendid piece of " oratory, emphatic and forcible in its appeal to the emotions; "bringing the audience by many different roads to the main "conviction which the orator seeks to impress; profoundly " animated with genuine Pan-hellenic patriotism, and with the "dignity of that free Grecian world now threatened by a "monarch from without. . . . We find Demosthenes, yet "only thirty [-three] years old — young in political life — "and thirteen years before the battle of Chæroneia — taking "accurate measure of the political relations between Athens "and Philip; examining those relations during the past, "pointing out how they had become every year more unfavor-"able, and foretelling the dangerous contingencies of the "future, unless better precautions were taken; exposing with "courageous frankness not only the past mismanagement of "public men, but also those defective dispositions of the peo-"ple themselves wherein such management had its root; "lastly, after fault found, adventuring on his own responsi- "bility to propose specific measures of correction, and urging "upon reluctant citizens a painful imposition of personal hardship as well as of taxation." (Grote, Hist. Greece, vol. xi, pp. 442-443).

- We are not informed whether the motion of Demosthenes 27 on this occasion was carried or not. In all probability that feature, at any rate, upon which he justly laid most stress, the personal participation of the citizens in a permanent expedition, - was not adopted. The habitual listlessness of the Athenians, the insensibility of many to the threatening nature of Philip's aggressions, the craven feeling in others of inability to cope with him, perhaps, too, the influence of citizens acting in the interests of Macedon, of whom we now hear for the first time (iv. 18), conspired to neutralize the effect of the orator's magnificent harangue. Yet his words may not have been wholly thrown away, but, apart from the increase of reputation which they must have brought him, may have led to the blockade of the Macedonian coast of which we hear shortly after, and to other measures of which no traces are preserved.

Fall of Olynthus.

The powerful city of Olynthus, standing at the head of the Chalkidic confederation, remained for some years in alliance with Philip (see § 17). But his self-aggrandizing policy probably at last aroused the Olynthians' alarm; and in 352, while he was engaged in Thessaly, the philo-Athenian party among them (ix. 56) brought the city, in disregard of Macedon, to conclude peace (not alliance) with Athens. In consequence of the state of feeling indicated by this move, the relations between Philip and Olynthus became so far from amicable that the former, on his return in 351 from his Thracian expedition (see § 23), made some threatening movement towards the Chalkidian territory (iv. 17). A temporary accommodation was, however, patched up, and during the short term of nominal friendship which followed, Philip seems to have been at work to win over partisans in the various Chalkidic cities; his success in Olynthus itself is shown by the banishment from that city of the anti-Macedonian leader, Apollonides (ix. 56, 66). When as much as possible had been done in the way of 29 secret intrigue, he proceeded in 349 to overt hostilities; which, to be sure, until he was within five miles of Olynthus, he declared were not directed against that city itself (ix. 11). The Olynthians, not deceived by this flimsy pretense, appealed, in their extremity, to Athens to conclude an offensive and defensive alliance. Demosthenes, in his three Olynthiac Orations, seconded the appeal, and with success. The alliance was accepted and aid sent in three successive expeditions, but all to no purpose. One after another the cities of the peninsula fell before the arms of Philip, until, at last, in 348, the treason of the two cavalry commanders, Lasthenes and Euthykrates, consigned Olynthus to a like fate (vi. 21; ix. 56, 66). Such of the inhabitants as had not perished in battle or made their escape from the district, were sold into slavery, and their cities, thirty-two in number, were razed to the ground (ix. 26).

The Conclusion of the Peace of Philokrates.

The destruction of the Chalkidic cities was in itself enough 30 to spread horror and alarm throughout Greece, but the effect of these disasters upon Athens was made ten-fold greater by the fact that numerous Athenian citizens, serving in Olynthus, had been taken captive by Philip. Add to this that since the accession of Philip, the Athenian confederacy had been steadily dwindling, so as now to include only the smaller maritime states, such as Thasos, Skiathos (iv. 32), Peparethus, Prokonnesus, Tenedos, etc., and that the military efforts of Athens, tardy and ineffectual as they had been, had yet made a heavy drain upon the resources of the state, and one cannot wonder that a cessation of hostilities came to be eagerly

- 31 desired. Even before the fall of Olynthus the Athenian actors, Aristodemus and Neoptolemus, whose profession secured their safety in a hostile country, had brought from Philip assurances of his readiness for peace with Athens. So had also Ktesiphon, who had gone to Macedonia on an embassy in the midst of the war (vi. 28). On the renewal of these assurances through Aristodemus after the destruction of Olynthus, a certain Philokrates proposed in the Athenian assembly that an embassy of ten men be sent to Philip to treat for peace. The motion was passed, and among the envoys appointed were the mover, Philokrates, and the orators, Æschines and Demosthenes. On most of these men Philip made a very favorable impression, which, in several cases, he probably strengthened by means of bribes (vi. 34). They returned to Athens early in the spring of 346, and were followed shortly after by Macedonian plenipotentiaries. Hereupon Philokrates, who was almost certainly in the pay of Philip, moved that peace and alliance be concluded between Philip and his allies on the one hand, and Athens and her allies, but with the exception of the Phokians, on the other, on the terms proposed by the king; viz., that each party retain its present 32 possessions. The proposal to exclude the Phokians from the treaty was one both dishonorable and dangerous to Athens: dishonorable, because they were allies of Athens (see §19), and dangerous, because, if they were left alone to withstand Philip, he was likely to effect the passage of Thermopylæ, and so have unhindered access into Central Greece. To this excluding clause, therefore, strong opposition was made by Demosthenes and other patriots; but the Macedonian plenipotentiaries were firm in insisting upon it, and philippizing Athenian orators, such as Philokrates and Æschines, represented that the refusal to admit Phokis to the treaty by no means indicated hostile designs on the part of Philip against that state, but
  - was due to his unwillingness to offend the enemies of Phokis, the Thebans and Thessalians, with whom he was on friendly terms. The Athenians, in their desire for an end of the war, suffered themselves to be persuaded, and, insisting only on the omission of the excluding clause from the letter of the convention, tacitly complied with its requirements by swearing in the presence of the Macedonian envoys the customary ratifying oaths, together with the representatives of their allies generally, but not of the Phokians. The ten Athenian 33 ambassadors were then directed by the people to make a second journey to receive the oaths of Philip and his allies (vi. 29). Now Philip was engaged at the time in pushing his conquests in Thrace, to the injury of Athens; and as he was likely to interpret his agreement with Athens so freely as to retain everything he could get up to the moment of completing by his oath the ratification of the treaty, it was important to check his operations as soon as possible. But in spite of the remonstrances of Demosthenes, the embassy lingered in Athens, loitered on the way, and finally refused to go to Philip in Thrace, but waited for him at Pella, his capital. Fifty days after their departure from Athens, Philip returned home, having in the interval captured stronghold after stronghold on the Thracian coast, of which some, as Serrhium and Hieron Oros, had been occupied by Athenian garrisons shortly before peace negotiations began (ix. 15).

At Pella, embassies from Sparta, Thebes, Phokis, and other 34 Greek states, as well as that from Athens, awaited him. With these in his train, he marched on into Thessaly, all the while leading the Phokians to believe that he meant them no harm (ix. 11), and holding out hopes of advantage to everybody. Finally, on reaching Pheræ, he swore the Peace of Philokrates, and the Athenian envoys took their departure, arriving at Athens about the middle of the summer of 346, after an absence of seventy days. Demosthenes was now 35 thoroughly alarmed at the position of affairs, and at a meeting of the senate  $(\beta o \nu \lambda \dot{\eta})$ , of which he was a member, he conjured the city not to abandon Thermopylæ and the Phokians. But in the assembly (ἐκκλησία) of the following day, Æschines still held out his encouraging assurances: Philip meant no harm to the Phokians, but would humble Thebes and rebuild the cities of Thespiæ and Platæa (see § 5); he would hand over Eubœa (see § 41) to Athens as a price for Amphipolis (see § 15), to which the Athenians still fondly cherished their claims; he would even, so Æschines hinted, re-attach to Attica the frontier town of Oropus, which, twenty years before, had passed into the hands of Thebes (vi. 29, 30; ix. 11). In vain did Demosthenes protest. The people preferred agreeable falsehoods to disagreeable truths, and laughed approvingly when Philokrates cried out, "No wonder, men of Athens, that Demosthenes and I do not think alike; for he drinks water, but I, wine" (vi. 30). A vote of the people extended the peace to the descendants of the contracting parties (vi. 31), and demanded of the Phokians the surrender of the temple at Delphi to its immemorial defenders, the Amphiktyons. Deserted thus by Athens, the Phokian army capitulated, and Philip, being now unhindered at Thermopylæ (vi. 7, 35), entered at once into Central Greece.

Amphiktyonic Assembly, held soon after, not only were the Phokians forever excluded from the Amphiktyonic League, and their votes transferred to Philip and his successors, but the annihilation of the Phokian nation was decreed. This decree was speedily executed. The cities of Phokis were destroyed, and their inhabitants scattered into villages (ix. 19, 23). Many fled the country, which became a scene of desolation and misery. The Thebans and Thessalians, on the other hand, whose forces had joined Philip (vi. 14), received substantial benefits. In the interests of the Thebans the walls of Orchomenus, Koroneia, and Korsiæ, three Bœotian towns which had sided with Phokis, were razed, and all Bœotia was again united under Thebes (vi. 13); while the Thessalians, besides recovering the Πυλαία, or leading place in the Amphiktyonic Assembly and in the administration of the Temple of Delphi, were presented with the fortress of Nikæa near Thermopylæ, and had the district of Magnesia (see § 21) restored to them (vi. 22). Finally, to Philip himself, together with the Thebans and Thessalians, the Amphiktyonic Assembly assigned the presidency of the Pythian games (ix. 32). Philip, in fact, had forced his way into the circle of Hellenic nations, and became henceforth the generally recognized champion of the ancient Amphiktyonic League.

The Years of Nominal Peace (346-340).

Rudely as the expectations of the Athenians had been dis-37 appointed, the city could not do better than accept the state of things which her own folly had brought about. Philip, on his side, was disposed to abide for a time by the terms of the Peace, at least to the extent of abstaining from direct aggressions upon Athens, though he was far from construing that convention, as Demosthenes does (ix. 17), to require him to subside into inactivity. On the contrary, he was constantly busy in strengthening and extending his power. After an expedition against the Illyrians and Dardanians, he tightened his hold upon Thessaly by occupying with a Macedonian garrison rebellious Pheræ (ix. 12), by re-appropriating the harbor-revenues (see § 21), and by putting the whole country under the control of a board of ten of his partisans (vi. 22). In the Peloponnesus, likewise, he made himself felt. Here, 38 Sparta was, as usual, in a state of hostility toward Argos and Messene, the latter of which states she was seemingly trying to recover (see § 5); but Philip demanded the recognition by Sparta of Messenian independence (vi. 13), and sent mercenaries to Argos and Messene, whom he promised to follow speedily in person (vi. 9, 15). With a view to counteracting his efforts in this quarter, the Athenians sent an embassy into the Peloponnesus, on which Demosthenes served. But the warnings which the orator addressed to the Argives and Messenians against trusting Philip (vi. 20-25), though well 39 received at the time, worked no lasting effect (vi. 26). Accordingly, a little later, at some time in the year 344, envoys from these states came to Athens to complain of the Athenian adhesion to Sparta. It is presumable that this embassy was instigated by Philip, and indeed, according to one account, envoys from Macedon, arriving at the same time, joined their voices with those of the Peloponnesians. Thus the assembly which met to hear the message of the ambassadors, and, in their presence (vi. 28), to vote a reply, had really to consider, under one of its aspects, the reigning question of the time, the question how to deal with Philip. It was on this occasion that Demosthenes delivered the Second Philippic, an oration which merely served to introduce the reading of a paper proposed by the orator as a suitable reply to the envoys. The harangue urges the Athenians to be watchful against the king, and denounces the philippizing party in the city. As for the reply itself, its tenor can only be guessed, for the document is lost. "The tone of the speech leads us to sup-"pose that the reply made no material concession; ... yet "it so far satisfied Philip and his allies as to avoid an open "rupture." (Thirlwall, Hist. Greece, ch. xlv.)

Other Peloponnesian states besides Argos and Messene passed under Philip's control. The Arcadians were devoted to him; and in Elis a philippizing party overthrew the existing government and attached the state to the interests of Macedon (ix. 27). North of the Isthmus, in Megara, a similar attempt was made, but this failed, apparently through the exertions of Athens (ix. 17, 27). Again, the island of Eubea, whose alliance the Athenians had secured in 357 (see § 6), had early become an object of Philip's intrigues (see § 21). In 350, discords, seemingly fomented by him, had broken out there, the Athenians had taken sides with Plutarch, tyrant of Eretria, who, after betraying them, had quitted the island with his mercenaries (ix. 57), and all Eubœa had been added to the list of Philip's allies. Still, in the principal cities, 41 philo-Athenian parties maintained themselves or revived. Chalkis, such a party succeeded in 343-2 in effecting an alliance with Athens, while in Eretria and Oreos the philippizers carried the day. Thus in Eretria the Macedonian faction, headed by Klitarchus, was strong enough to cause the dismissal of an Athenian embassy (ix. 66), and finally to expel their opponents (ix. 57), who took refuge in the port of Porthmus. Philip then sent mercenaries under Hipponikus, razed the fortifications of Porthmus (ix. 33), installed Klitarchus and two others as tyrants of Eretria, and frustrated two attempts of the banished citizens to reinstate themselves (ix. 58). Similarly, in Oreos, the resistance offered by Euphræus to the philippizing party was of no avail. He was thrown into prison, where he committed suicide, and Macedonian troops assured the possession of the city to its tyrants (ix. 12, 33, 59-62).

An expedition in the winter of 343–2 against Arybbas, 42 king of the Molossians in Epirus, afforded Philip an opportunity to threaten Ambrakia and Leukas, Corinthian possessions, to conclude an alliance with the Ætolians, under the promise of seizing for them Naupaktus, occupied at the time by an Achæan garrison (ix. 27, 34), and in other ways to strengthen himself in that quarter. Fears were aroused that he would in person cross over into the Peloponnesus. The Athenians now bestirred themselves, sent an embassy, consisting of Demosthenes and other patriots, through the Peloponnesus, to stir up resistance to Philip's schemes; and by deeds, as well as words, presented so determined a front that his movements were arrested (ix. 72).

On his return march, the king, in order still further to take 43 from Thessaly the power of dissension and resistance, established tetrarchs, one over each of the four districts, Thessaliotis, Phthiotis, Pelasgiotis, and Hestiæotis (ix. 26). These tetrarchs, though Thessalians, were creatures of his, and he directed the administration of the country (ix. 33). At the same time he occupied with Macedonian troops Nikæa, near Thermopylæ (see § 36), and Echinus in southern Phthiotis, though the latter city, Bœotian by origin, was claimed by Thebes (ix. 34). These measures accomplished, he abstained for a while from further aggressions in Greece, and opened a new campaign in Thrace, with the determination now to completely subdue that region (ix. 27). Not until the winter of 339–8 did Philip appear again south of Mt. Olympus.

The Renewal of Hostilities and Subjugation of Greece.

- During the period in which the Peace of Philokrates continued to be nominally observed, the patriotic party in Athens, headed by Demosthenes, had been steadily gaining ground. Shortly after the conclusion of that convention, Philokrates, its chief author, was impeached, and, on his flight from the city, was condemned to death in his absence. And later, when Æschines was brought to trial by Demosthenes for unfaithfulness in the discharge of his duties as ambassador to Macedonia (see §§ 33 ff.), a large minority of the dikasts gave their votes for condemnation.
- In the closing scenes of the struggle for independence, Demosthenes stands forth conspicuously as the leader, not only of his own city, but of all the independence and patriotism that remained in Greece. It was events in Thrace which drew Athens anew into open conflict with Philip. The Athenians had acquired, in 357, a precarious hold upon the Thracian Chersonese, with the exception of the important town of Kardia on the isthmus, which ultimately allied itself with Philip (ix. 35); and, by way of securing their possession more effectually, a body of kleruchs was sent thither, in 343, under the command of a certain Diopeithes (ix. 15).

These settlers got into a quarrel with the Kardians, and when 46 Philip supported the latter with troops (ix. 16), Diopeithes retaliated by collecting a force and making a raid into Thrace. Philip then sent to Athens a letter, remonstrating and threatening (ix. 16, 27); but, though in the assembly which met to consider this communication, the policy of peace at any price was urged by many, Demosthenes, in his oration On the Chersonese, defended Diopeithes so vigorously that he was allowed to retain his command, and no concession was made to the king. Not long after, say in the summer of 341, the Third Philippic was delivered. It would seem that the debate of which this speech is a product was occasioned by a request for help from the settlers in the Chersonese (ix. 73), and that the earlier speakers confined themselves to the discussion of Thracian affairs (ix. 19); but to the view of Demosthenes the question of the hour was one of far wider scope. It was a question of peace or war, a question which touched the honor and the very existence of all Hellas. All the energy of the orator's nature, all his power of kindling emotions in an audience, all his rare pan-Hellenic patriotism, found expression in the Third Philippic. This, the latest of Demosthenes's parliamentary harangues, is also the most eloquent and the noblest.

The prosecution of Philip's plans of conquest in Thrace 47 had soon brought him into collision with his allies (see § 23), the Perinthians and Byzantines, whom he had accordingly prepared to attack (ix. 34). But before the siege of these towns had actually begun, the Athenians, acting on the advice urged by Demosthenes in the Third Philippic (§§ 71 ff.), strained every nerve to bring about a general alliance against the aggressor. In this they had no small success. Eubœa was liberated of its tyrants and joined hands with Athens. Better still, the wisdom and the eloquence of Demosthenes effected a reconciliation between Athens and the cities of Perinthus and Byzantium (cf. § 10), which, on being attacked by Philip, in 340, were so effectively supported by their friends, that the king was baffled and withdrew. At the call of Athens, which had now openly annulled the Peace of Philokrates, Megara, Achæa, Corinth, Leukas, and Kerkyra rallied round the standard of liberty. More than all, Thebes, the long-standing foe of Athens and friend of Philip, was induced, through the efforts of Demosthenes, to change its front and co-operate vigorously in the work of defence.

At this moment the resistance which Demosthenes had been 48 making for years with such keen foresight, such burning zeal, such unsullied and catholic patriotism, to the steady advance of conquest, seemed about to be successful. But the task was too great. The opposing armies met for a decisive conflict at Chæroneia (338 B.C.) and the overwhelming victory of Philip annihilated forever the independence of Greece. For some years Demosthenes lived in honor in his own city, and the speech On the Crown, delivered in 330, was at once his greatest oratorical effort and the successful vindication of his whole public career. Yet even this measure of good fortune was not to last. The hatred of his enemies at home and abroad gathered strength, and his exile from Athens and the self-inflicted death by which he escaped a more ignominious death at the hands of the Macedonians (322 B.C.) closed with a certain tragic fitness the history of his heroic, unavailing contest.

Athenian Financial and Military Systems.

49 The principal ordinary sources of the Athenian revenue were these: (1) the rent of public property, especially the silver-mines; (2) the taxes paid by resident aliens (μέτοικοι); (3) export and import duties and market dues; (4) judicial fees and fines; (5) the contributions (συντάξεις) of members of the confederacy. It is to be observed that there was, in general, no direct tax imposed upon the citizens. There was, however, something not wholly dissimilar in that peculiar arrangement of the Athenian constitution which required wealthy citizens from time to time to discharge for the public good certain services, called liturgies. These were of two kinds: (1) Encyclic or ordinary liturgies, having to do with the celebration of religious festivals, and recurring, therefore, at stated intervals. Of this class the most costly were the choregia and the gymnasiarchy, consisting respectively in the formation, maintenance, and training of a chorus for a dramatic or musical performance, and in the oversight and support of athletes preparing to compete in a gymnastic contest (iv. 36). (2) Extraordinary liturgies, necessary only in time of war. Here belongs especially the trierarchy, which involved heavier pecuniary sacrifices than any of the preceding class. In the fifth century, B.C., each trierarch received from the state a war-ship, of which he had to take charge for one year; and, though the state supplied pay for the crew, the trierarch, if patriotic, often expended, in putting and keeping his vessel in a sea-going condition, in securing, by payment of bounties, the most competent seamen possible, and so on, from forty minæ to a talent ($720-$1,080). But in the fourth century, a number of men usually combined to perform a single trierarchy. As to the details of the method by which 50 the various liturgical obligations were apportioned on any given occasion among members of the wealthy classes, we are imperfectly informed. But we know that when an appointee considered himself less bound to undertake the burden assigned him than some one else who had been passed over, he could demand of such person to make a complete exchange of property with himself (ἀντίδοσις), or else assume the liturgy. If the demand was refused and both parties persisted, the question would be brought to trial before the proper magistrates, who, in case they decided against the defendant, would give him the option of the alternatives proposed by the plaintiff. Suits of this kind (ἀντιδόσεις) were especially common in the time of Demosthenes, when men resorted to all means for escaping from sacrifices for the public good, and they must evidently have done serious evil in delaying naval preparations in times of need (iv. 36).

- 51 The revenue, whose sources have been enumerated above, was more than sufficient to carry on the government in time of peace. There was, therefore, an annual surplus, most of which, in the fifth century, was habitually laid by as a warfund. Pericles, however, had introduced the custom of distributing to poor citizens, at those Dionysiac festivals which were celebrated with dramatic representations, the sum of two obols apiece, to pay the price of admission to the theatre. The moneys thus distributed were called  $\theta \epsilon \omega \rho \iota \kappa \acute{a}$  (sight-seeing moneys), and afterward, when it became the practice to make similar distributions on the occasion of other than the Dionysiac festivals, the same name was made to cover all these. After the Peloponnesian War a separate Theôric Fund was established, which soon came to absorb the entire surplus revenue. From this Fund some expenses incurred by the state in the celebration of religious festivals, e.g., for sacrifices, seem to have been defrayed, but the bulk of it was apparently spent in multiplied distributions at the festivals, no longer now to the poor alone, but to rich and poor alike. How much the Theôric Fund usually amounted to, it is, unfortunately, impossible to determine; but there seems no room for doubt that the uses to which it was put were in great part inexcusable and pernicious. Hence we find Demosthenes repeatedly urging the application of this money to war purposes, which measure, however, he did not succeed in carrying through until just before the battle of Chæroneia.
- 52 The highest military officers in Athens were the ten generals (στρατηγοί), who had supreme command of the army and navy in time of war, and who also exercised sundry administrative and judicial functions at home. Subordinate to the generals were, for the infantry, the ten taxiarchs, or commanders of battalions, and, for the cavalry, the two hipparchs and their sub-officers, the ten phylarchs. These officers were annually elected, no matter what the state of the country might be, but, with the exception of the thousand knights  $(i\pi\pi\epsilon is)$ , who were annually chosen from the two highest property-classes, and were liable to military service in time of war, nothing like a standing army was ever maintained in Attica.

In like manner the fleet, in which the strength of Athens 53 always lay, was not kept, in time of peace, in readiness for active service. In the fourth century, B.C., the Athenian navy, though less well cared for than before, was still superior to that of any other state, numbering as it did from three to four hundred triremes. Of these, some were used only as transports for infantry  $(\tau \rho \iota \eta \rho \epsilon \iota s \ \sigma \tau \rho a \tau \iota \omega \tau \iota \delta \epsilon s)$  or cavalry  $(\tau \rho \iota \eta \rho \epsilon \iota s \ i \pi \pi a \gamma \omega \gamma \iota \iota)$ , while others were proper ships of war  $(\tau \rho \iota \eta \rho \epsilon \iota s \ \tau a \chi \epsilon \iota a \iota)$ . There were, besides, ships of burden  $(\pi \lambda o \iota a)$ , which carried provisions, equipments, etc., for the use of an expedition.

The population of Attica may be roughly estimated at 54 500,000, among whom only about 90,000 were citizens, the remainder being made up of 45,000 resident aliens or metics, and 365,000 slaves. Of the adult male citizens, whose number may be put at 20,000, those between the ages of 19 and 58, inclusive, were liable to be called upon, by a vote of the popular assembly, to perform military service. The metics also were sometimes drafted, and even the slaves were employed in war, especially as oarsmen and sailors. In the time of Demosthenes, however, the Athenians commonly hired mercenaries to conduct their expeditions (see § 7).

The usual pay of a foot-soldier was two obols (six cents) 55 per day as wages ( $\mu\iota\sigma\theta\delta$ s), and the same amount as provision-money ( $\sigma\iota\tau\eta\rho\epsilon\sigma\iota\sigma\nu$ ,  $\tau\rho\circ\phi\dot{\eta}$ ); that of a cavalry-soldier three times as much. The crew of a ship of war numbered two hundred men, who received, on the average, as much as infantry soldiers, so that the wages and provision-money of one crew would amount at least to forty minæ (\$720) per month. Mercenaries seem to have been engaged on the same terms as citizens.

56 Now since, in the Age of Demosthenes, there was no reserve-fund on which to draw in time of war (see § 51), military and naval expenses could not be properly met except by imposing a property-tax (εἰσφορά) on the citizens. Such a tax was regarded as a species of extraordinary liturgy, and was submitted to with great reluctance. As far as possible, it was evaded, and in the consequent failure of Athens to pay her troops lay another cause of her inefficiency in war (see § 8).

Athenian Legislative Bodies.

- 57 The Athenians had two legislative bodies, the βουλή and the ἐκκλησία. Of these, the former was composed of five hundred men, fifty from each tribe, annually chosen by lot. Thus the Boulê fell into ten tribal groups, and these took turns, each for a tenth part of the year, in assuming the chief responsibilities of the entire body. During this period of precedence the members of the group were called prytanes, whence their term of office went by the name of prytany. Out of the number of the prytanes a president (ἐπιστάτηs) was daily chosen, who, in earlier times, acted as chairman in the meetings of the Boulê and the Ecclêsia; but, in the fourth century, this epistatês chose nine proëdri from the nine tribes other than his own, and from among the proëdri, finally, another epistatês was chosen, who presided in both houses.
- Besides being charged with various administrative functions connected especially with the department of finance, the Boulê had for its business to initiate the discussions of the Ecclêsia. No subject could constitutionally come before the latter body, until it had been first taken up by the former, and a recommendation in regard to it had been there voted and embodied in the form of a  $\pi\rho\rho\beta\sigma\nu\lambda\epsilon\nu\mu\alpha$ , or preliminary decree. As a legislative body, the Boulê could do no more than this.

The all-powerful agency in the Athenian constitution was 59 the popular assembly or  $\epsilon \kappa \kappa \lambda \eta \sigma i a$ . All adult male citizens were entitled to be present at the meetings of the Ecclêsia, but although there were about 20,000 of these, the number actually present was probably seldom more than 6,000 or 8,000. The usual place of meeting was the so-called Pnyx, whose precise location is a matter of controversy. Regular sessions of the Ecclêsia were held four times in each prytany, and extra sessions, if necessary, could be summoned by the prytanes, or by the generals through the prytanes.

The meeting was opened with sacrifice and prayer. The 60 epistatês then proposed (προτιθέναι) the subject of debate, and read the probouleuma. The people then voted whether to concur in this recommendation, or to deliberate (σκοπείν or βουλεύεσθαι) further on the matter. In the latter case, a crier called upon whoever would to give his advice (συμβουλεύειν). Any citizen, except such as were under deprivation of civil rights (ἀτιμία) for certain crimes and misdemeanors, was at liberty to speak, though naturally there were only a few whose talents and training fitted them to address so large and turbulent a gathering. These few were called the customary speakers (οἱ εἰωθότες), or simply the orators (οἱ λέγοντες), or those coming forward (οἱ παριόντες). He who wished to speak rose from his seat (ἀναστήναι), went forward (παριέναι) to the orator's platform, and gave his opinion (γνώμην or à γιγνώσκει ἀποφήνασθαι), accompanying his speech, if he chose, with a written motion  $(\gamma \rho \dot{\alpha} \phi \epsilon \iota \nu)$ , either modifying or opposing the rejected probouleuma. When the discussion was ended, the various motions were set before the people, who voted in general by show of hands (χειροτονείν, ἐπιχειροτονείν, ψηφίζεσ- $\theta a \iota$ ). The decision ( $\mathring{a} \stackrel{\circ}{\epsilon} \mathring{o} o \xi \epsilon$ ) of the majority was declared by the epistates, and was then recorded and deposited with the public archives.

Some Features of the Style of Demosthenes.

A speech by a great Athenian orator was, in general, written out beforehand, and delivered from memory; and if the exigencies of the public occasion made additions or alterations necessary, these extemporized passages were, in the final revision of the speech by the hand of its author, so elaborated and assimilated to the context as not to be distinguishable by any marks of style. Now one of the most characteristic features of Greek oratory, both as addressed to present audiences, and, still more, as bequeathed in written form to posterity, was an extreme care in the choice and arrangement of words, - a care which, at the present day, is to be found only in poetry. The speeches of Demosthenes, constituting, as they do, the highest achievement of Greek oratorical art, exhibit this exquisite finish of style in a degree which only Greek ears could adequately appreciate, but which is still magical for our own. The presence of this quality makes itself felt by even a cursory reader, and becomes more and more striking on attentive study. Especially noteworthy is Demosthenes's observance of two stringent rules designed to secure smoothness and dignity of style, one of which rules had been imposed upon oratorical prose by the influential rhetorician Isokrates, while the other was seemingly original with Demosthenes himself. They were, to avoid hiatus, and to avoid a succession of more than two short syllables. Exceptions to the former rule were permitted by our orator only after the article, the relative pronoun, and a few common particles; to the latter, only in the middle of single words, like γενόμενος, or in close combinations, like δ πόλεμος, and then only rarely. It is to be observed, however, that as in poetry the final syllable of a verse is unrestricted as to quantity, and hiatus is permitted between the end of one verse and the beginning of the next, so, in the practice of Demosthenes, the two rules above given do not apply where a pause occurs in the delivery; also, that in most texts, the present one included, many elisions, crases, and aphæreses which were made in speaking are left unindicated, so as to produce apparent, but only apparent, cases of hiatus; and that slight orthographical errors, such as the mistaken insertion of the  $\nu$ movable, have introduced apparent violations of the rhythmical law. Thus, to illustrate these remarks, the first words of the First Philippic were pronounced, Εὶ μὲν περὶ καινοῦ τινος πράγματος προυτίθετ' ωνδρες 'Αθηναίοι λέγειν, while in the second section of the same oration the hiatus after exec is justified by the pause, and that after TOI is one of the sort which, as above stated, Demosthenes did not scruple to allow himself. The ἔνεκα of § 3 ought probably to be written είνεκα, and it is not until we reach the word φοβερὸν in the same section that we encounter an unmistakable case of three short syllables in succession. Contrast this with the style of such writers as Plato or Xenophon, and the difference will immediately become evident.

In the structure of his sentences, Demosthenes exhibits 62 every gradation from simplicity to complexity. Contrast, for instance, the extended but artistic and lucid periods into which the procemia of the accompanying orations are east, with the short, nervous sentences of impassioned passages like Phil. I, 10. Of metaphor, and rhetorical ornament generally, we find only a sparing use. One favorite means employed by the orator for emphasizing an idea deserves to be noticed, that, namely, of coupling synonymous words. The εἰδῆτε καὶ θεάσησθε of Phil. I, 3, is a typical example, and others may be found on nearly every page. Often, as in the case quoted, there seems to be no intentional discrimination of meanings; often, however, the second of the two words is a more special and precise term than the first, and is most appropriately rendered into English by an adverbial word or phrase, e.g. Phil. II, 1, πράττει καὶ βιάζεται; and often, finally, one of the two is a figurative, and the other a usual, expression for the same idea, e.g. Phil. III, 28, κακῶς διακείμεθα καὶ διορωρύγμεθα, Phil. III, 12, νοσοῦσι καὶ στασιάζουσιν.

It is not because of the cogency of their logic, or the riches of their thought, that so high a rank is assigned to the speeches of Demosthenes. Their chains of reasoning are simple, and not always convincing; there is in them no profound political wisdom; they share, in one word, that inferiority in variety and value of subject-matter which characterizes all ancient literature in comparison with modern. But in their power to stir the feelings,— a power ever controlled by a perfect taste,— they stand as models for all time. And it is by reading the original Greek, without translating, that this eloquence can be best appreciated.

- PART III. SUPPLEMENTARY ARGUMENTS AND APPEALS, §§ 31-51.
  - I, -a. Exordium: The orator apologizes for taking precedence of older speakers, § 1.
    - b. The situation of Athens, though disgraceful, is not hopeless, § 2.
    - c. The heroic achievements of the city in the past are an encouragement for the future; while, on the other hand, Philip has shown himself an enemy too dangerous to be neglected, § 3.
    - d. Philip was not daunted at the outset of his career by his inferiority in strength to Athens. Athens, by imitating his example, will meet with a success like his, §§ 4-8.
    - e. But the consequences of continued neglect will be fatal, §§ 9-12.
- II.—a. Prothesis: Statement of subjects to be discussed, and request for a deliberate hearing, §§ 13-15.
  - b. Such preparations ought to be made that, when necessity arises, a sudden expedition may be made against Philip, §§ 16-18.
  - c. Above all, a small, permanent force ought to be organized, one-fourth to be Athenians, three-fourths mercenaries, §§ 19-22.
  - d. Justification of the smallness of the force, and of its composition, §§ 23-27.
  - e. Estimate of expenses, and statement of ways and means, §§ 28-30.
- III. a. Geographical considerations which reinforce the demand for a perma nent force to hover near the Macedonian coast, §§ 31-32.
  - b. The good results which will flow from the adoption of the measures recommended, §§ 33-34.
  - c. The folly of waiting till the hour of need before making military preparations, §§ 35-41.
  - d. Philip's restless activity is a sign of divine favor toward the Athenians, § 42,
  - e. Who are again conjured to participate personally in military affairs, §§ 43-46.
  - f. Only so can justice be done to the generals, and the habit of idle gossip be put down, §§ 47-50.
  - g. Peroration: The orator has spoken plainly, in the hope of doing good, § 51.

1. — For the technical terms used in this section, see I. § 60. — El...λέγειν, If, men of Athens, some new matter were the subject of debate, εὶ προὐτίθετο implies οὐ προτίθεται. The action of the presiding officer denoted by προτιθέναι is here thought of as continuing during the discussion. If it had been thought of as consisting merely in the announcement of the subject,  $\epsilon i \pi \rho o i \tau \epsilon \theta \eta$  would have been used. With the conception here adopted, cf. Isok. viii, 15: παρελήλυθα άποφανούμενος & τυγχάνω γιγνώσκων περί ων οί πρυτάνεις προτιθέασιν. -έπισχων, having waited. The following av is repeated with ηγον and έπειρώμην. H. 873 a; G. 212, 2 (not H. 803 b; G. 211). — των είωθότων: sc. γνώμην ἀποφαίνεσθαι. — ἀπεφήναντο. G. 239, 2; M. 66, 3; cf. the construction in final clauses, H. 742. —  $\dot{v}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho$   $\dot{w}=\dot{v}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho$   $\tau o \dot{v}\tau \omega v$   $\dot{v}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho$  $\dot{\omega}\nu$ , and  $\dot{v}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho=\pi\epsilon\rho\dot{\iota}$ . H. 633 b, end; G. p. 238. —  $\pi$ oddakis  $\pi$ pór $\epsilon\rho\sigma\nu$ . The assembly had had to take measures in regard to Philip repeatedly. I. 15-18, 21-23. — καὶ πρώτος άναστὰς, though I have risen first. For καὶ, see H. 795 f; G. 277, N. 1 (b). — ἐκ...χρόνου. See below, § 2. — αν εδει. The expression έδει αν (χρην αν) είναι implies οὐ δεῖ  $(\chi \rho \tilde{\eta})$  εἶναι, while ἔδει  $(\chi \rho \tilde{\eta} v)$  εἶναι generally implies οὐκ ἔστιν, but is sometimes used in the sense of έδει αν (χρην αν) είναι. Cf. M. 49. 2, N. 3, and Rem. 1. — The foregoing exordium is modelled freely upon that of Isokrates's Archidamus. Thus not unfrequently the Greek orators borrowed from one another or from earlier orations of their own. D.'s apology for opening the debate may imply that some lingering respect was still paid to the ancient rule, attributed to Solon, according to which citizens over fifty years of age had precedence in the Ecclesia over their juniors.

2. — οὖν: here, as often, not inferential but transitional. Translate by then or now. — δοκεῖ: sc. τὰ παρόντα πράγματα. — δ...γενέσθαι. Nearly the same words recur in IX, 5. The meaning of ἐκ ...χρόνον appears from the phrase ἐν τοῖς παρεληλυθόσι there substituted. See L. & S. ἐκ II, 3, and cf. the Latin expressions, de nocte, by night, de die, by day, etc. — τἱ οὖν...γενέσθαι. What then is this? It is the fact that affairs are in a wretched plight on account of your doing no part of your duty, since certainly, if they were so in spite of your doing everything which you ought, there would not be even a hope of their being improved. That is to say: the most disgraceful thing in our recent history is that we have suffered great losses through our own apathy and neglect; but in this very fact there is encouragement for the future, for if inaction has ruined, energy may repair, our fortunes. ποιούντων ὑμῶν expresses cause, πραττόντων, concession. With ೩ε προσῆκε understand πράττειν. The tense of προσῆκε may be explained by H. 703, G. 222, N. 2, but better, in this instance, by the principle of attraction. Cf. G. 235, 2; M. 64, 2.  $\gamma \epsilon \nu \epsilon \sigma \theta a \iota$  depends upon  $\epsilon \lambda \pi i \varsigma$ . H. 767; G. 261, 1. For its tense, see M. 23, 2, N. 2.

3. — ἔπειτα. After εἶτα or ἔπειτα, following πρῶτον μέν, δέ is commonly omitted. Cf. §§ 16, 34. — ένθυμητέον...άναμιμνησκομένοις. The expression here lacks concinnity. If completed as begun, it would read, ένθυμητέον (sc. ύμιν) και παρ' άλλων άκούουσι και αὐτοῖς άναμιμνησκομένοις, where ταρ' άλλων άκούουσι and αὐτοῖς ἀναμιμνησκομένοις would be parallel expressions, applicable respectively to the younger and older members of the audience. But τοῖς εἰδόσιν is inserted as if there had preceded τοῖς εἰδόσι παρ' ἄλλων ἀκούουσι or simply τοῖς παρ' άλλων ἀκούουσι, and ἀναμιμνησκομένοις becomes a circumstantial participle with εἰδόσιν, making an expression comparable to the οἰδα ἀκούων of § 24. Translate: In the second place, it ought to be considered, both as you hear it from others, and by those of you who know it from personal recollection. — ήλίκην — ώς. As two or more interrogatives, so two or more relatives, may, in Greek, be combined without a copula in dependent questions and exclamations. Cf. § 36, πότε... τί δεῖ ποιεῖν, and H. 826, 827. Translate: how great power the Lacedæmonians once had, not long ago, and yet how nobly, etc. - E... πολύς (sc. έστι): an adverbial formula, used in the sense of ου προ πολλοῦ. — τῶν δικαίων, the right. — τὸν...πόλεμον refers to the Corinthian or Bœotian War, or both. I. 2, 4. — είδητε καλ θεάσησθε. I. 62. — φυλαττομένοις =  $\tilde{a}v$  φυλάττησ $\theta\varepsilon$ . — τοιούτον... βούλοισ $\theta\varepsilon$ , such as you would wish, in a satisfactory condition. The expression is in the same construction as φοβερον. — παραδείγμασι: in pred. agreement with  $\tau \tilde{\eta} \dot{\rho} \dot{\omega} \mu \eta$  and  $\tau \tilde{\eta} \ddot{v} \beta \rho \epsilon \iota$ . H. 607, a. The relations of Athens with Sparta and with Philip illustrate or exemplify the statements just made as universally true. - ik...voûv, in consequence of giving heed to affairs. — τούτου: Philip. — ἐκ...ἐχρῆν = ἐκ τοῦ μηδὲν φροντίζειν τούτων ων φροντίζειν έχρην. μηδέν is cogn. acc.

4. — το΄...ἀπολωλέναι, the fact that all the fortified towns (i.e., those about to be named) have been lost. — μέντοι: a more emphatic adversative than δέ. — Πύδναν...τοῦτον. I. 6, 16, 17, 18. — οἰκεῖον κύκλω. The natural order would be κύκλω οἰκεῖον, but this would give a hiatus. I. 61. οἰκεῖον = as our οινη, κύκλω = round about, i.e., around the Thermaic Gulf. — πολλά...'κείνω: applicable to the Pæonians, Illyrians, and Thessalians. I. 13, 18, 21. — μετ' ἐκείνου, on his side, ranged with him. So below, § 8.

5. — εί ταύτην έσχε την γνώμην, if he had conceived this idea. εί είχε would mean, if he held or if he had held. — ἐπιτειχίσματα...χώσας, strongholds commanding his country, referring to Pydna, Potidæa, and Methone. χώρας is objective gen. — ἄν belongs both to ἐπραξεν and to ἐπτήσατο. G. 212, 4; M. 42, 4. — ὧν. Η. 810; G. 153, and N. 1. — ταῦτα...μέσω. Cf. Xen. Anab. 3, 1, 21: ἐν μέσω γὰρ ἤδη κεῖται ταῦτα τὰ ἀγαθὰ ἀθλα, ὁπότεροι ἀν ἡμῶν ἄνδρες ἀμείνονες ἀσιν. Similarly Arrian, Anab. 5, 26, 7. The metaphor is taken from the ancient custom of giving prizes of intrinsic value for success in the games, and exposing these to view near the contestants. See Hom. II. 18, 507: κεῖτο δ' ἀρ' ἐν μέσσοισι δύω χρυσοῖο τάλαντα; Virg. Æn. 5, 292 ff.

6. — καὶ γάρ τοι, and so, a common collocation of particles in D., similar to  $\tau οιγάρτοι$  in meaning. Cf. IX, 58. — χρησάμενος, having adopted, by adopting; how different from χράμενος? — τὰ μὲν — τὰ δὲ : unsymmetrical construction. τὰ μὲν is in partitive apposition with πάντα, τὰ δὲ is object of ποιησάμενος. — τὰ δὲ. Το this category the Olynthians and Thessalians belonged. I. 17, 20-21. — ἐθελήσητε. ἐθελήσαι differs from ἐθέλειν nearly as to resolve from to wish. — γενέσθαι ἐπὶ, to take your stand upon.

7. - και έκαστος...στρατεύεσθαι, and each one of you, abandoning all evasion, will become ready to act where he is needed and where he could make himself of service to the city, the man of property to pay taxes, and the man of military age to serve in the army. εἰρωνεία is dissimulation of one's abilities in order to escape onerous duties. On εἰσφέρειν, consult Dict. Antiq., EISPHORA, and I. 56. the military age at Athens, see I. 54. — συνελόντι άπλως, briefly and simply, in one word (lit. for one comprehending the matter in a simple statement). With συνελόντι, είπεῖν is generally used. 601 a; G. 184, 5. — ὑμῶν αὐτῶν γενέσθαι, to rely upon yourselves.  $i\mu\tilde{\omega}\nu$  is pred. gen. of possession. H. 572 c; G. 169, 1. same idea is expanded in what follows, παύσησθε...πράξειν. — οὐδὲν. An infinitive dependent upon  $\hat{\epsilon}\lambda\pi\hat{\iota}\zeta\omega$  is commonly negatived by  $\mu\eta$ , but sometimes by ov. In this sentence the mood of παύσησθε might at first be thought to require the use of  $\mu\eta\delta\hat{\epsilon}\nu$  (H. 841; G. 283, 2), but οὐδὲν is admissible, because the hope here referred to is one actually existing. -- και τὰ ὑμέτερ' αὐτῶν begins the apodosis. On ai- $\tau \tilde{\omega} v$ , see H. 676, fine print; G. 137, N. 1. — The argument of §§ 4-7, though stirring and hence satisfactory for the purposes of oratory, is not logically cogent; for the success of an energetic Philip over an inactive Athens affords no ground for expecting the success of an energetic Athens over an energetic Philip. Only on the supposition of Philip's sinking into apathy at the same time that Athens aroused herself, would the two compared cases be at all correspondent.

8. — πεπηγέναι ἀθάνατα, are fixed for ever. The pred. adj. ἀθάνατα is proleptic, i.e., expresses the result of the verb. — τις, many a one. The remark, μισεὶ...φθονεὶ, is applicable to the Pæonians, Illyrians, and Thessalians.— καὶ τῶν...ἔχειν, even of those, etc. — πάνυ: separated, to avoid hiatus, from οἰκείως, which it modifies. — καὶ ἄπανθ'...ἐνείναι, and all those passions which exist in any other men, we must suppose to exist also in his followers. For ἐνι, see H. 102 a; G. 23, 2, end. καὶ, also, is often used, as here, in both the demonstrative and the relative clause. H. 856 b. — κατέπτηχε. H. 712; G. 200, N. 6. — πάντα ταῦτα, all these feelings or passions, like ἄπαντα in the prec. sentence. — ἀποστροφήν: virtually equivalent to καταφυγὴν. The idea is that, if Athens takes vigorous measures against Philip, the various forms of dissatisfaction in his empire, which do not now dare to show their heads, will rally about her.

9. — τὸ πράγμα, the state of the case, explained by what follows. — ἀσελγείας: gen. partitive. H. 589, cf. 559 c; G. 168. — ἄς φασι throws the responsibility for the statement upon common report. — και οὐχ ...περιστοιχίζεται, and is not the man to rest in possession of what he has conquered (lit. holding the things which he has conquered to rest upon these), but is ever compassing something more and drawing his nets about us on all sides, while we delay and sit at ease. μένειν depends upon οἰος. H. 814; M. 93, 1, N. 1. προσ- in προσπεριβάλλεται signifies in addition; for the rest of the word see L. & S. περιβάλλω. In περιστοιχίζεται we have a metaphor from hunting. See L. & S. στοίχος II.

10. — ἐπειδὰν τί γένηται. H. 826 b. — ἐπειδὰν...-ἢ: a fictitious answer, professing to state what is in the minds of the audience. νη Δία and the corresponding negative μὰ Δία were common colloquialisms, amounting to hardly more than intensive particles. νη Δία may here, as often, be translated forsooth, the sentence being spoken in a tone implying dissent or contempt on the part of the orator. — τί. H. 556; G. 166. — ἐγὰ μὲν γὰρ, For I, for my part. γὰρ introduces the reason for the implied answer (χρη τὰ γιγνόμενα ἀνάγκην ἡγείσθαι) to the preceding question. μὲν is used here, as often, without a correlative δέ, serving to give special prominence to ἑγὰ as against possible dissentients. Cf. VI, 16. — εἰπέ: used interjectionally, like ἀγε and φέρε, without regard to the number of persons addressed. — περιώντες, sauntering about, lounging about. Cf. § 48; VI, 14. — αὐτῶν = ἀλλήλων. H. 672 a and b; G. 146, N. 2 and 3. — λέγεταί τι καινόν; Cf. Acts of the Apostles, xvii, 21. — γένοιτο γὰρ ἄν, why, could there be ?  $\gamma \dot{a}\rho$  is often thus used in animated questions, and this use is probably not to be derived from its value as a causal conjunction, but to be regarded as one of the relics of its original value as an intensive particle.

11. — τέθνηκε...ἀσθενεί. The orator repeats dramatically a question and answer, supposed to be exchanged by two Athenians. For the allusion, see I. 23. — ἄν τι πάθη. L. & S. πάσχω II, 3, b. So below, § 12. — οὕτω: i.e., as you have been doing. — ούδὲ γὰρ οὖτος, for not even this man, i.e., the existing Philip, in opposition to the future Philip, whom Athenian negligence might be expected to raise up. — παρά, on account of. Cf. IX, 2.

12. — καίτοι καὶ τοῦτο, But still further. H. 508 b. — τὰ τῆς τύχης: hardly different in meaning from  $\eta$  τύχη. D. is fond of such periphrases. Cf. § 32, τὸ τῶν πνευμάτων; § 45, τὸ τῆς τύχης and τὸ τῶν θεῶν; IX, 45, τὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων. H. 563 b, end; G. 141, N. 4, end. — ἢ περ... ἐπιμελούμεθα = ἢ περ ἀεὶ βέλτιον ἡμῶν ἐπιμελεῖται ἢ ἡμεῖς ἡμῶν αὐτῶν. In our sentence the verb is omitted in the first and expressed in the second member of the comparison, a construction contrary to the constant English, and the prevailing Greek custom. Cf. § 34, οὐκ ὡσπερ, κ. τ. λ. — καὶ τοῦτ': i.e., his death, implied in εἰ τι πάθοι. — τοθ': probably imperative, while in IX, 30, κἀκεῖνό γε ἰστε, the form is indicative. — ὄντες = εἰ εἰητε. — ἐπιστάντες, putting yourselves at the head of. — διδόντων τῶν καιρῶν = εἰ οἱ καιροὶ διδοῖεν. On διδόντων, see H. 702, end; G. 200, N. 2. — Αμφίπολιν. I. 14, 15. — ἀπηρτημένοι., far removed, the opposite of πλησίον ὄντες. ἀπηρτημένοι...γνώμαις explains ὡς νῦν ἔχετε.

13. — 'Ως...ἐτοίμως. Construe: ὡς μὲν οἶν οἔι (ὑμᾶς) ἄπαντας ὑπάρχειν ἐθέλοντας ποιεῖν ἑτοίμως τὰ προσήκοντα, and make the clause dependent upon λέγων. ὑπάρχειν ἑθέλοντας, a favorite form of expression with D., is hardly different in meaning from ἐθέλειν. M. 108, 2, N. 5. — ὡς...πεπεισμένων, in the assurance that you know and believe it. H. 795 e; G. 277, N. 2. — τὸν τρόπον τῆς παρασκευῆς — τὸ πλῆθος — πόρους χρημάτων: three topics to be treated. The first two are taken up together, §§ 19–27, the last by itself, §§ 28–30. See the Analysis. — ὅσον — οὕστινας: sc. ἀπαλλάξαι ἀν...οἰομαι. — καὶ δῆ, at once. — δεηθείς...τοσοῦτον, asking from you, men of Athens, nothing but this. τοσοῦτον refers to what follows, and is cognate accusative.

14. — κρίνατε — προλαμβάνετε. Notice the change of tense. The former verb denotes an act to take place at the conclusion of the exposition; the latter, a continued state of mind during the exposition.  $\pi \rho o\lambda a\mu \beta \acute{a}\nu \epsilon \nu$  here = to be prejudiced, to prejudge.  $\pi \rho \acute{o}\tau \epsilon \rho o\nu$  is pleonastic. — ἐξ ἀρχῆς, at yîrst. — οἱ εἰπόντες, those who say. In such cases as this the aorist participle retains its original meaning, not denoting past time, and differing from the present participle only in not representing the action as prolonged or repeated. — εἰς δέον, to the purpose. Cf. § 40, εἰς δέον  $τ\iota$ .

15. —  $\tau$ (s...δυνήσεται, what armament being provided, and how great, and from what source, will be able to hold out; i.e., what must be the composition and the size and the means of support of an armament which shall be able to hold out. The clause repeats the threefold division of the subject given § 13. —  $\pi$ εισθέντες implies a satisfactory adjustment by treaty. —  $\sigma$ ίστω: i.e., if the war should be ended in either of the ways just mentioned. —  $\tau$ οῦ λοιποῦ: how different from  $\tau$ ο λοιποῦ? Η. 591, end; G. 179, 1. —  $\mu$ ή: used instead of οῦ on account of the inf. ἐχειν. Η. 841. —  $\tau$ ο δὲ...δώσει, but the case shall at once enter the proof that I have promised what I can perform.  $\pi$ ρᾶγμα is here used, as often, in the sense of a law-suit (cf. Lat. res), and the metaphor from judicial procedure is kept up by κριταὶ.

16.—On the Athenian navy, see I. 53.— πεντήκοντα: a moderate proportion of the whole number.—εἶτ. See ἐπειτα, § 3, note.— αὖτοὺς — αὖτοὺς (sc. ὑμᾶς — ὑμῖν οr ἡμᾶς — ἡμῖν): emphatic. The Athenians must act in person, not trust to mercenaries. — ὡς πλευστέον: sc. ὄν. L. & S. ὡς C, I, 3, end; M. 113, N. 10, (a), (b), (c). The omission of ὄν occurs occasionally after ὡς. M. 111, 2, Rem.— ἐἀν τι δέη, if there be any need; if, perchance, it be necessary. Cf. IX, 71.— τοῖς ἡμίσεσι: dat. of advantage. The gender and number of the word are determined by τῶν ἱππέων. On the Athenian hippeis, see I. 52.

17. — ταῦτα μὲν: repeated at the beginning of § 19, where the expected δὲ follows. — τὰs...στρατείαs, those (well-known) sudden expeditions of his, etc. On ἑξαίφνης, see H. 492 f; G. 141, N. 3. For the position of ταύτας and αὐτοῦ, see H. 538 a, end; G. 142, 4, N. 1. The words εἰς...βούλεται are attributive to στρατείας. When a noun preceded by the article has several attributives, one of these sometimes follows the noun without the article; moreover, to a verbal noun, like στρατείας, even though it have no attributive before it, attributive prepositional phrases are sometimes annexed without the article. — Πύλας — Χερρόνησον — "Ολυνθον. I. 22, 23, 28. — ἐκ...ἄγαν, awaking from this excessive indolence. — ἄσπερ: sc. ὑρμήσατε. — Εὔβοιαν — "Αλίαρτον — Πύλας. I. 6, 2, 22. — φασιν. The Attic orators generally refer to oral tradition rather than to books as the source of historical information. Cf. §§ 23, 24; IX, 48.

18. - Surely it (i.e., the preparation I recommend) is not altogether to be despisea, even if you would not do that (i.e., make sudden expeditions), as I say you ought; (on the contrary, it is worth while). in order that he either may know you to be in readiness ... and keep quiet through fear, or, disregarding these preparations, may be caught off his guard, etc. For αν with ποιήσαιτ', see L. & S. αν B, III: G. 227, N. είδως εύτρεπεῖς ὑμᾶς = είδως ὑμᾶς ὅντας εὐτρεπεῖς. Cf. § 41. εὰν ἐν Χερρονήσω πύθησθε Φίλιππον. The omission of the copula is common in such cases in Greek, as in English. - cloiv: not the copula, but the substantive verb. — οί... έξαγγέλλοντες. Ι. 27. — μηδενός: masc. or neut.; used rather than οὐδενὸς on account of the mode of  $\lambda \eta \phi \theta \tilde{\eta}$ . H. 841. — πλείν depends upon ὅντος ἐμποδων. M. 92, 1, N. 2, end. πλείν... γώραν must be distinguished from the sort of expedition referred to at the end of the preceding section. D. means to say that even if the Athenians do not make sudden expeditions to meet Philip and check his advances, they may descend upon his territory when he is absent or unprepared. — ἐνδῶ: sc. ὁ Φίλιππος.

19. — To the comparatively commonplace and unimportant recommendations of && 16-18. D. does not recur in the course of the oration. just as in the introductory passage, §§ 13-15, he does not appear to have had them in view. His main effort is to secure the adoption of the measures set forth in §§ 19-22. The novel features of his plan (cf. § 14, αν δοκώ τινι καινήν παρασκευήν λέγειν) are: (1) The force to be raised is to be a permanent one; (2) It is to be composed, to the extent of one fourth part, of Athenians; (3) After serving for a fixed term, the Athenian members of the force are to be relieved by fellow-citizens. On the whole subject, see I. 52, 54. - δεδόχθαι παρεσκευάσθαι. While the agrist infinitives would denote the performance of the actions, the perfects denote the condition of their having been performed. But, in this connection, there is no more difference of sense than in English between These preparations ought to be adopted and These preparations ought to exist. Cf. M. 18, 3, Ν. - μή μοι: sc. λέξητε οτ λεγέτω τις. Η. 308 b. - έπιστολιμαίους δυνάμεις, paper-forces; i.e., forces promised in letters (ἐπιστολαί) to generals abroad, but not actually sent. Cf. §§ 30, 45. For the meaning and position of ταύτας, see § 17, ταύτας, note. — άλλ': sc. δυναμίν τινα. - της πόλεως, under the control of the city. - καν - καν. These particles, literally meaning both if - and if, regularly correspond to our whether - or. In this instance we must either take the kai of the first  $\kappa a v$  as meaning and, and suppose that  $a v - \kappa a v$  are used in the sense of  $\kappa a \nu - \kappa a \nu$ , a use for which no parallel has been found; or we must, with several editors, insert καὶ into the text after ἐσται. — τὸν δεῖνα, So-and-so. ὁ δεῖνα often refers to a particular person, whom one cannot or will not call by name; here, and regularly in D., it is used like the English  $Mr.\ A.$  or  $Mr.\ B.$ , where a particular name would be appropriate, but none is definitely indicated. It thus differs from  $\tau\iota_{\zeta}$  and ὁστισοῖν, which are wholly indefinite in meaning. — ὁντινοῦν. L. & S. ὅστις IV, 2; H. 816 a. — τροφήν = σιτηρέσιον. See I. 55.

20. — ἔστα... ἔξει: the same threefold division as in §§ 13, 15. — ταῦτα ποιεῖν: i.e., πείθεσθαι καὶ ἀκολουθεῖν. — καθ' ἔκαστον. This phrase, originally meaning one by one, came to be sometimes used in the sense of ἐκαστος alone, both in the nominative and the oblique cases. It is here object of διεξιῶν. Similarly καθ' ἐνα, IX, 22. See H. 493 f. — ξένους μὲν λέγω, Mercenaries, on the one hand, I propose. The sentence is resumed in a different form at the beginning of the next section. — ὅπως μὴ ποιήσετε. H. 756 a; G. 218, N. 2. — ἔβλαψεν: gnomic aor. G. 205, N. 1. — ἐπὶ τῷ πράττεν, at the time of action.

21. — δη : resumptive. — τοὺς...δισχιλίους, foot-soldiers 2,000 in all. L. & S. πᾶς C, II. — ης ἄν τινος = ηστινος ἀν. — μη : used rather than οὐ through the influence of εἶναι. H. 841. — ἐκ...ἀλληλοις, relieving one another. διαδοχή, like διαδέχεσθαι and διάδοχος, may be followed by a dative. — τρατευομένους = στρατευομένους τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπου ῶσπερ τοὺς πεζούς. The noun following ὥσπερ is here, as often, attracted from the nominative to the case of the noun in the former member of the comparison. — ἱππαγωγούς. I. 53. Transports (στρατιώτιδες) for the 2,000 foot-soldiers are not mentioned by the orator, but are, of course, understood.

22. — είεν, so far, so good. — ἔχοντος...ναυτικόν. I. 15, 21. The fact that D. regarded ten war ships (ταχείας τριήρεις, I. 53) as a sufficient convoy for the transports, indicates that Philip's navy was still small. — καλ...τριήρων. Notice that καὶ belongs with the words ταχειῶν τριήρων, not with ἡμῖν. — ἐπειδάν...διδάξω, when I have shown why, etc. — τηλικαύτην, of such a size, i.e., so small. — πολίτας...κελεύω. The natural translation would be, I urge that those who make the expedition be citizens. But D. has no proposed that all, but only that a fourth part of the force be Athenians. It is necessary, therefore, to take είναι as the substantive verb, having as its subject πολίτας τοὺς στρατενομένους, which hardly differs from τοὺς στρατενομένους πολίτας, and to translate, I demand the existence of the (just-mentioned) citizens doing military service.

Cf. § 8,  $\tilde{\epsilon}\nu\iota$ , note. — πορίσασθαι. Compare with πορίσαντας, § 25, and account for the difference of voice. — τὴν...παραταξομένην = ἤτις  $\tilde{\epsilon}\kappa\epsilon$ ίν $\omega$  παρατάξεται, fit to meet him in the open field. The fut. part. with the article is often thus used to describe a person or thing as intended, fit, or likely to do something. Cf. M. 108, 2, and N. 1. — τούτ $\omega$ ...χρῆσθαι: amplification of ληστεύειν. — τὴν πρώτην, at first. H. 552; G. 160, 2. The implication is that by and by it will be possible to cope with Philip in regular warfare. — μισθὸς — τροφή. I. 55. — ἀκούω. Cf. § 17, φασιν note; § 24 οἰδα ἀκούων. For the tense of ἀκούω, see H. 698; M. 10, N. 5. — τρέφειν — συστρατεύεσθαι = ὅτι ἔτρεφεν — συνεστρατεύεσθε. G. 203, N. 1; M. 15, 3; H. 714. For the fact, see I. 2. — αὐτοὺς ὑμᾶς. Would ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς be admissible here? H. 673, fine print.

24. - ἐνίκων. The Athenians gained several successes in the Corinthian War, but among these regarded with most pride the exploit of Iphikrates mentioned in the Introduction, § 2, as appears from the repeated references to it in the orators. It seems probable, then, that D. has here this victory in mind. The imperfect of νικάω is often used in speaking of a single occasion. — έξ...στρατεύεται, But since the mercenary troops have conducted your expeditions by themselves. On έξ ού, see H. 813 a; on αὐτὰ, H. 674; on στρατεύεται, Madvig's Lat. Gram. 334, Obs.; G. 200, N. 4; M. 10, N. 3. - VIKQ: used instead of some such word as ἀδικεῖ, in order to make a rhetorical antithesis with the preceding sentence. See I. 8. - πρὸς 'Αρτάβαζον, κ. τ. λ. Ι. 8. — μάλλον: sc.  $\hat{\eta}$  έφ' ούς  $\hat{a}v$  έκπέμφθη. — εἰκότως, and no wonder. D. represents Chares as obliged to yield to the wishes of his soldiers, which view, in the case referred to, is probably too favorable to that general. — μή διδόντα, Η. 839; G. 283, 4.

25. — ἐπόπτας = μάρτυρας. Cf. § 47. — τῶν στρατηγουμένων, of the conduct of the generals. H. 694 b; G. 198. — παρακαταστήσαντας. Give the meaning of the prepositions in composition. — γέλως = γελοῖον. Cf. the use of ἀνάγκη in the sense of ἀναγκαῖον. Similarly we say in English, It is a shame to do this, using shame in the sense of shameful; and so on. — εί γὰρ, κ. τ. λ. γὰρ introduces the justification of νῦν...πράγμασων. This justification extends through sections 26 and 27, which dwell with sarcastic insistence upon the folly of keeping Athenian officers idle at home, and entrusting the military interests of the state to foreigners.

26. — οὐκ ἐχειροτονεῖτε, Were you not in the habit of electing? referring to the recent period during which the Athenians had been at war with Philip. We might translate, Did you not elect, and understand the words as referring to the last annual election, but that the following sentences seem to describe the conduct, not of the officers for that year only, but of such officers generally. χειροτονείτε would suit the connection much better, but this reading has no manuscript authority. — ταξιάρχους — στρατηγούς — φυλάρχους — ίππάρχους. See I. 52 and Dict. Antiq. — τας πομπάς. Processions formed a popular and spleudid feature of some of the Athenian festivals, as the Panathenea. In these processions the cavalry with their officers played an important part; what the generals and taxiarchs had to do is not known. — ἱεροποιών: ten in number, yearly chosen by lot to superintend the state sacrifices. — ωσπερ...πηλίνους: condensed for ώσπερ γὰρ οἱ πλάττοντες τοὺς πηλίνους ταξιάρχους καὶ φυλάρχου: εἰς τὴν ἀγορὰν ποιοῦσ:ν. The clay images referred to were used as toys by children. See Becker's Charicles, Excursus to Scene I. - els Thu ayopav. The agora was a place where, amongst other business operations, small wares were exposed for sale; it was also, by virtue of its central situation, an important scene for processional displays. The sentence alludes to both these facts. Translate: For like those who mould officers in clay, you elect your taxiarchs and phylarchs for the market-place, not for the war; i.e., your officers are mere puppets. of no use but to make a show in the market-place.

27. - où yàp... elvar, Why, ought there not, men of Athens, to be taxiarchs from among you, a hipparch from among you, in a word, citizen officers? For γàρ, see § 10, last note; for ἐχρῆν, § 1, ἔδει, note. Although two hipparchs were annually elected, apparently an established custom, which D. did not wish to combat, required the presence of one of them in Athens, to officiate in the religious processions. Hence D. here urges only that one hipparch should serve abroad with the army. — "ν' ήν. H. 742; G. 216, 3. — ώς άληθως, in very truth. Cf. VI, 10, ως έτέρως, note. — Λήμνον. I. 3. From a fragment of the orator Hypereides, it appears that an Athenian hipparch visited Lemnos each year. Our passage suggests that the object was to assist in some religious celebration. - Merédaor. Nothing is certainly known about this man, except the fact inferable from the context here, that he was not an Athenian. Harpocration says he was a half-brother of Philip, and this may be correct. Athens in the age of Demosthenes often engaged foreign captains in her service, who would be called στρατηγοί or ἵππαρχοι according as they commanded foot or horse, but these were in addition to the ten generals and the two hipparchs yearly elected by the city from the number of her own citizens. In the appointment of Menelaos there had been, as appears from the next sentence, an extreme irregularity; he had not received his commission from the Ecclesia, but from some unauthorized person; perhaps, for example, from the mercenary general, Charidemos.  $-\dot{\alpha}\lambda\lambda'...\tau \hat{\nu}\hat{\nu}\tau \nu$ . This sentence, which bears on an entirely different abuse from that which the orator has been combating, makes an ineffective ending to the passage.  $-\ddot{\epsilon}\delta\epsilon \iota$ : how different from  $\delta\epsilon \bar{\iota}$ , in the preceding sentence? Cf.  $\dot{\epsilon}\chi\rho\bar{\eta}\nu$ , above. - δστις αν  $\dot{\eta}$ . M. 63, 5, end.

28. — τὸ τῶν χρημάτων, the question of funds. — τοῦτο...περαίνω, This subject, then, I proceed to treat (lit. go through with). καὶ emphasizes  $\pi \epsilon \rho a i v \omega$ : as you desire to hear, so I will also discuss.  $\pi \epsilon \rho a i v \omega$  is a pres. rhetorically used for the fut. — χρήματα: nom., indicating the subject-matter of the following exposition. Cf. the use of the nom. in titles, as below,  $\Pi \delta \rho o v$  'Απόδειξις. — ἔστι μὲν ἡ τροφή. These words awaken the expectation of a passage, beginning ἔστι δ' ὁ μισθός, and making computation of the amount needed for wages. Instead of this, the adversative passage (εἰ δὲ τις οἰεται, κ. τ. λ.) states that no money need be raised for wages. The meaning of τροφή is made more unmistakable by the appositive σιτηρέσιον, ration-money. The computations (see I. 55) are for one year, thus:—

10 ships will cost . . . . 20 minæ  $\times$  10  $\times$  12 = 2,400 minæ = 40 talents. 2,000 foot-soldiers,

10 drachmæ  $\times$  2,000  $\times$  12 = 240,000 drachmæ = 2,400 minæ = 40 talents. 200 cavalry-soldiers, 30 drachmæ  $\times$  200  $\times$  12 = 72,000 drachmæ = 720 minæ = 12 talents.

Total, 92 talents.

It will be observed that the orator makes no provision for the support of crews for the transport triremes (cf. § 21). Perhaps he intended that the soldiers, instead of going as passengers, should themselves row the transports. This sometimes occurred; a case in Thucydides, III, 18.— πρός. H. 615; G. 191, N. 2.— τὴν ναῦν. H. 527 e. The same use of the article in ὁ στρατιώτης and τοῦ μηνός, below.— τοσαῦθ' ἔτερα, as much more, forty talents. The same words sometimes mean as much again, twice as much.

29. — εἰ...ἔγνωκεν, But if any one thinks the existence of ration-money for the expedition to be an insufficient provision, he is mistaken. στηρέσιον...ὑπάρχειν is subject of εἰναι, and ἀφορμὴν is a predicate-nom. — τοῦτ' ἄν. In Greek, emphatic words may precede the conjunctions εἰ, ὡς, ὅτι, etc. Cf. § 43; IX, 16, 44, 68. — προσποριεῖ. The middle form might have been expected, but the reference of the action to the subject is left out of account. The idea is: the army will relieve the state by itself supplying the deficit. —ἐγὰ...ἔτοιμος. The ellipsis of the first and second persons of the copula, as well as of the third, is common with ἐτοιμος. In IX, 4, ἔτοιμος is used alone for ἐγὰ εἰμι ἔτοιμος. — ὁτιοῦν. See § 19, ὁντινοῦν, note. — πόθεν: sc. ἔται. — λέξω, I will read. At this point a statement of ways and means (Πόρον ᾿Απόδειξις) is read by the orator. The document is lost.

30. — ήμες. D. never uses the plural in speaking of himself alone. He must therefore have had assistance in the preparation of his paper, probably from one or more officials connected with the department of finance. — ἐπειδάν...γνώμας, but when you are voting upon the propositions or motions; i.e., mine and those of subsequent speakers. — ἄν ὑμῖν ἀρέσκη. This is Sauppe's emendation for the difficult manuscript reading, â ἀν ὑμῖν ἀρέσκη. Cf. IX, 70, ἐγὰ νὴ Δί' ἐρᾶ καὶ γράψω δὲ, ὥστε, ἀν βούλησθε, χειροτονήσετε; De Symmoriis, 14, οἶμαι δὴ δεῖν ἀκούσαντας ὑμᾶς αὐτήν, ἀν ὑμῖν ἀρέσκη, ψηφίζεσθαι. — χειροτονήσετε, you will adopt them, i.e., my measures. — ταις ἐπιστολαίς. See § 19, ἐπιστολιμαίους, note.

31. — Δοκείτε δέ μοι — αν — βουλεύσασθαι, But it seems to me that you would deliberate. δοκέω is very seldom used impersonally when the personal construction is admissible. H. 777. — ὅτι...Φίλιππος, that by the help of the winds and the seasons of the year Philip gets the start of you, and so accomplishes most of his designs; lit., accomplishes most things by getting a prior hold upon them, τὰ πολλὰ being object of both προλαμβάνων and διαπράττεται. The meaning of this clause is made more explicit by what follows, φυλάξας...ἀφικέσθαι. — φυλάξας... χειμώνα, waiting for the etesian winds or the winter. The strong northerly winds which blow in the Ægean Sea during dog-days were called ἐτησίαι. They would greatly hinder an Athenian fleet making for Macedon. Again, the Greeks were accustomed to suspend navigation in the stormy season of winter. - ήνίκ' αν μή δυναίμεθα, when we could not. This is a hypothetical or indefinite relative sentence; hence the use of  $\mu\dot{\gamma}$ . H. 835; G. 231. The use of the opt. with ἀν is analogous to that in § 18, εἰ μὴ ποιήσαιτ' ἀν τοῦτο. See also M. 63, 2.

32. — βοηθείαις, extemporized forces, opposed to παρασκευή συνεχεί καὶ δυνάμει. — ύστεριοῦμεν ἀπάντων: as in the instances cited § 35. — ύπάρχει...δυνάμει, and it is possible for you to use as winter-quarters for the force. For χειμαδίφ, see § 3, παραδείγμασι, note. — Λήμνφ...νήσοις. I. 3, 30. — ά χρὴ στρατεύματι: sc. ὑπάρχειν. — τὴν δ'...ἔσται, but during the season of the year when it is easy to get to land, and the winds are safe, it (the force) will easily hold a position near the country (Macedonia) itself, and near the entrances to the commercial ports; in order, obviously, to commit depredations on Philip's coast, to prevent exportation and importation, and, in general, to carry out the o'sject (see § 23) for which the force was to be created. On  $\tau \delta \tau \tilde{\omega} \nu \pi \nu \epsilon \nu \mu \dot{\alpha} \tau \omega \nu$ , see § 12,  $\tau \tilde{\alpha} \tau \tilde{\eta} \epsilon \tau \dot{\nu} \chi \eta \epsilon$ , note.

33. — 'A χρήσεται, What uses he (sc. δ τούτων κύριος καταστάς) will make. H. 547 c; G. 159, N. 2. — παρά τὸν καιρὸν, as occasion arises. -- δ... ήμων, the one appointed by you in charge of these undertakings. κύριος is a pred. adj. with καταστάς. H. 532 a, end. — γέγραφα. This shows that this speech was accompanied by a motion embodying its recommendations. For the technical use of γράφω, see I. 60. ών...λέγω = αν πρώτον πορίσητε, & ανδρες 'Αθηναίοι, ταῦτα τὰ χρήματα α λέγω. The asyndeton is due to the fact that this sentence is a mere summing up of recommendations previously made and referred to in what immediately precedes. — ἐντελη̂...δύναμιν, in a word, the whole force complete. δύναμιν is in the same construction as the preceding accusatives, and  $\dot{\epsilon}\nu\tau\epsilon\lambda\tilde{\eta}$  is used proleptically in agreement with it. Cf. § 8, ἀθάνατα, note. The object of κατακλείσητε is to be supplied from δύναμιν. Some editors, omitting the comma after δύναμιν. construe ἐντελῆ as in agreement with τάλλα, and δύναμιν as object of κατακλείσητε. - ταμίαι και πορισται. If there were any officials in D.'s time called poristæ, which is doubtful, they were presumably appointed on special occasions to devise ways of raising funds. The tamiæ were treasurers, who superintended the outlay of the public moneys. See Dict. Antiq. D. demands that the Athenians themselves attend to the provision and expenditure of funds, instead of throwing these responsibilities upon their generals (cf. I. 8) and that the generals be held accountable only for their conduct of military affairs. - Tov hoyov, the account, which generals, like other Athenian officials, were obliged to render at the conclusion of their term of service. See Dict. Antiq., EUTHYNE.

34. — ἀπὸ...συμμάχων: i.e., it is by preying upon the commerce of your own allies that he obtains the means of carrying on war against you (see I. 21). ὑμετέρων and ὑμὶν are brought together for emphasis. — ἄγων καὶ φέρων, agens et ferens, plundering. — αὐτοὶ, yourselves, in contrast with your allies. — οὐχ ὥσπερ, κ. τ. λ. The expression is here condensed by omitting the principal verbs, instead of omitting, as is done in English in such cases, the subordinate verbs. The meaning is: οὐκ οἰχήσεται ἔχων ὡσπερ ὤχετ' ἔχων, $\kappa$ . τ. λ. This is the regular ellipsis with  $\dot{\phi}$ ίχ ωσπερ. Cf. § 12, ἐπιμελούμεθα, note. Translate freely: he will not treat you as he did in the past, when, etc. - πολίτας ύμετέρους: settled as kleruchs in Lemnos and Imbros. I. 3. - wxer exav, went off with, carried off. While the present of οἶχομαι and ἡκω is used as a perfect, the imperfect has commonly the meaning of a simple preterite. - Γεραιστώ: a convenient station for merchant-vessels bound from the Pontus or the northern Ægean for Athens. - ἐξέλεξε, levied, as ransom. - ἀπέβη, disembarked. — την ίεραν τριήρη. The Athenian state owned a number of sacred triremes, which were used to convey religious embassies from Athens, and on other public business. See Dict. Antiq., SALAMINIA. The presence of one of these vessels (the Paralos) at Marathon is, perhaps, to be explained by a statement of Philochoros, quoted in a scholium to Soph. Œd. Col. 1047, to the effect that the Delian theoria regularly touched at Marathon, to receive the blessing of the priest of Apollo there. - els tous xpóvous. at the times. H. 620 b, end.

35. - καίτοι...ποτε, But now why in the world? δή and ποτε give urgency to the question. — Παναθηναίων — Διονυσίων: the most important and costly of the Athenian festivals. The Panathenæa was celebrated especially by gymnastic and musical contests and a magnificent procession (cf. § 26); the principal Dionysiac festivals, by the representation of dramas in the theatre. See Dict. Antiq. χρόνου. Η. 591; G. 179, 1. — αν τε...έπιμελούμενοι, whether experienced or inexperienced men are chosen by lot as the superintendents of each of these. With aν τε — aν τε, cf. § 19, κaν — κaν. For the management of the Panathenaic contests, ten men, called athlothetæ, were annually appointed by lot. The First Archon had charge of the Dionysia. — οὐδ' εἰς ένα: more emphatic than εἰς οὐδένα. An idea of the expensiveness of the Athenian festivals may be gained from an inscription of the year 410 B.C., which records that at the Panathenæa of that year 5,114 drachmæ were paid to the sacrificial magistrates for a hecatomb, and 5½ talents to the athlothetæ for the contests; which two items must be understood to make only a small proportion of the whole outlay for the occasion. If, then, we understand D. to mean that the combined expenses of the Panathenaic and Dionysiac festivals in one year exceed the expenses of one expedition, the statement may not be much exaggerated. - kal... έχει = καὶ ἔχει τοσούτον ὅχλον καὶ παρασκευὴν ὅσην οὐκ οἰδ' εἴ τι τῶν ἀπάντων (ἐχει). ἐχει here serves as the verb for both the antecedent and the relative sentence. H. 819. In the former, a subject is to be supplied to it from à above. H. 818 c; G. 156, N. τι τῶν ἀπάντων = any thing in the world. — Μεθώνην — Παγασάς — Ποτίδαιαν. I. 18, 21, 17.

36. — πρόοιδεν έκ πολλού, knows long beforehand. — χορηγώς — γυμνασίαρχος. See I. 49 and Dict. Antiq., LEITURGIA. - πότε... TOLER, what he must get and when and from whom, and what he must do (lit. when and from whom and what having received, what he must do). Cf. § 3, ήλίκην — ώς, note. The idea is: every man knows what part he is to play in the approaching festival, and how he must prepare himself for it. — ἀνεξέταστον — ἀόριστον: proleptic. Cf. § 8.  $\dot{a}$ θάνατα, note. — άμα...καθίσταμεν.  $\dot{a}$ μα — καὶ (lit. = at the same time - and), may be translated, no sooner - than. - τριηράρχους - άντιδόσεις. I. 49, 50. - μετοίκους. See I. 54 and Dict. Antiq. - εδοξε: gnomic agrist. — τους χωρίς οἰκοῦντας. These were either a class of slaves, or perhaps rather the freedmen, so called because they lived apart from their masters or former masters. - airois. Cf. § 16, αὐτοὺς — αὐτοὶς, note. — ἀντεμβιβάζειν, to man the triremes otherwise, meaning, perhaps, to return to the original plan of sending metics and freedmen, or perhaps to adopt a new plan, e.g., to send slaves.

37. — ἐν...μέλλεται, while these delays are occurring. The nom. ταῦτα corresponds to the cognate acc. after an active form of μέλλω. G. 198. — τὸ...ἐκπλέωμεν, the object of our expedition. The article agrees with the relative clause. H. 525 c, end. — οἱ τῶν πραγμάτων καιροὶ, the opportunities afforded by circumstances; cf. Thuc. I, 142, τοῦ δὲ πολέμου οἱ καιροὶ οὺ μενετοί. Or the phrase may be translated, the opportunities for deeds; cf. IX, 38, τὸν καιρὸν ἑκάστον τῶν πραγμάτων. — εἰρωνείαν. See § 7, note. — ἀς... ἐξελέγχονται, And the forces which we think we have in the meantime, are proved just at the critical moments to be able to do nothing. The idea is: the few ships and men that we have in readiness, and have to rely on until our armament is ready, prove worthless when needed. ποιεῖν depends on οἰαί τε. H. 814; G. 151, N. 4. — ΰβρεως. Cf. § 9, ἀσελγείας, note. — τοιαύτας ἐπιστολάς. At this point the letters are read. See I. 21.

38. — ώς οὐκ ἔδει, alas. — οὐ μὴν ἀλλ', nevertheless (H. 848 e), correlative of μέν. — εἰ μέν...ὑπερβήσεται, if all that one passes over in his speech, in order not to give annoyance, circumstances also will pass over; or (taking τὰ πράγματα as object of ὑπερβήσεται), he shall pass over the realities also. With the latter construction the sentence is anacoluthic; καὶ ἔργφ ὑπερβήσεται would be expected instead of τὰ πράγματα ὑπερβήσεται. With either construction the sense is the same: if disagreeable things can be averted by merely not alluding to them. — προς ήδονην, with a view to pleasure, so as to please. Cf. § 51,  $\pi \rho \delta c$  χάριν. H. 654 c. — χάρις, agreeableness. — ἄν...προσήκουσα, if it be not timely. What is the conclusion of this condition? — ἔργφ: contrasted with  $\lambda \delta \gamma \omega \nu$ . — φενακίζειν. The subject is indefinite. H. 774, 1.

39. — οὐκ modifies δεῖ; ἀκολουθεῖν would require μή. The order of words corresponds to that in such English sentences as, I ask, not this, but that. — οὕτω repeats τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον. — τοὺς βουλευομένους, those who deliberate; i.e., in the case of Athens, the citizens in the Ecclêsia. The words are subject of ἡγεῖσθαι understood. — ἐκείνοις (i.e., τοῖς βουλενομένοις): more emphatic than αὐτοῖς. — τὰ συμβάντα διώκειν, to chase after events, instead of guiding them.

40. — ἀπάντων. This must refer to the Greek states only. At any rate, in 351, the resources of Athens in men and money were inferior to those of Macedon. — εἰς δέον τι, to any purpose. Cf. § 14, εἰς δέον. — οὐδὲν ἀπολείπετε (lit. you leave out nothing), you do nothing less than. — οἱ βάρβαροι: not trained like the Greeks in gymnastics. — τῆς πληγῆς ἔχεται, follows the blow, brings his hands to the part struck, instead of anticipating and warding off the coming blow. — ἐκεῖσέ εἰσιν, lit. thither are, combining the ideas, go thither and are there. Cf. H. 618 a; G. 191, N. 6. — προβάλλεσθαι, to hold his hands before himself, so as to parry blows. — βλέπειν ἐναντίον, to look his adversary in the eye.

41. — καὶ ὑμεῖς: introducing the second member of the comparison, instead of οῦτως ὑμεῖς. Cf. IX, 70. — Χερρονήσω — Πύλαις. I. 23, 22. — πύθησθε. Cf. § 18, εἰδὼς εὐτρεπεῖς ὑμᾶς, note. — ἄνω κάτω: a common abbreviation for ἀνω καὶ κάτω, ἀνω τε καὶ κάτω. — στρατηγεῖσθε. H. 694 a; G. 197, 1, fine print. — πρὶν...πύθησθε: epexegetical of πρὸ τῶν πραγμάτων. — ταῦτα...ἐγχωρεῖ, And this conduct perhaps once answered; but it has now gone its full length, so that it is no longer possible. The ἀκμή is the highest point, beyond which it is impossible to go; here virtually equivalent to τελευτή. ταῦτα is the subject of the three following verbs, of which ἐνῆν and ἐγχωρεῖ are usually impersonal. Another explanation makes the subject of ἡκει indeterminate (H. 494; G. 134, N. 1 (c)), but this seems less natural.

42. — ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως: to be joined with αἰσχυνόμενος. — ἔχων ὁ κατέστραπται. Cf. § 9, ἔχων ᾶ κατέστραπται. — ἀποχρῆν...δημοσία, I think that some of you would acquiesce in a state of things in consequence of which we should be condemned, as a nation, to shame and the reproach of cowardice and all that is most shameful. The subject of δοκεῖ is the implied antecedent of the following relative. For what finite mode does ἀποχρῆν stand? H. 783 b; G. 211. The verb

 $\delta \phi \lambda \iota \sigma \kappa \acute{a} \nu \omega$  may be used with an accusative either of the penalty or the charge; here  $a \iota \sigma \chi \acute{\nu} \nu \eta \nu$  is penalty,  $\dot{a} \nu a \nu \delta \rho \acute{\iota} a \nu$  is charge. To  $\dot{\omega} \phi \lambda \tau \kappa \acute{\sigma} \tau \varepsilon \varsigma$   $\dot{a} \nu \dot{\eta} \mu \epsilon \nu$  supply mentally as condition, if we acquiesced. The position of  $\delta \eta \mu \sigma \sigma \acute{\mu}$  is emphatic. —  $\nu \acute{\nu} \nu$  δ', But as it is. Often so, especially after a condition contrary to reality. —  $\tau \sigma \acute{\nu}$  πλείονος, that which is more, or simply, more.

43. — θαυμάζω — εἰ, I wonder that. G. 228; M. 56. — ἐνθυμεῖται, is concerned. — περὶ — ὑπὲρ, in reference to — for the sake of. περὶ here comes near to the proper meaning of ὑπέρ; cf. the opposite change of meaning in § 1. — οὐ στήσεται, will not stop. — εἶτα τοῦτ' ἀναμενοῦμεν, Shall we then wait for this? i.e., for some one to hinder him. εἰτα introduces an indignant question. — κενὰς: i.e., without soldiers. — τὰς...ἐλπίδας, So-and-so's hopes. Cf. § 45, τὰς ἀπὸ τοῦ βήματος ἐλπίδας. — ἐὰν. For the position of the word, see § 29, τοῦτ' ἀν γένηται, note.

44. — μέρε...οἰκείων, with some portion, at least, of citizen soldiers. στρατιωτῶν is a gen. of material. Different is the phrase, μέρος τι τῆς πόλεως, § 45, where the gen. is partitive. — νῦν...πρότερον. Cf. § 6, νῦν, ἐπειδή περ οὐ πρότερον — ἦρετό τις: a rhetorical fiction, a more vivid expression than ἔροιτ' ἀν τις. — οὐδέποτ'...δέοντων, never shall we obtain anything that we need. H. 845; G. 257.

45. — τῆς πόλεως = τῶν πολιτῶν. — κᾶν μὴ πᾶσα. It is usual to supply here ἀποσταλῆ, but συναποσταλῆ, which is more natural, makes sufficiently good sense. Wherever some part of the city, even if not the whole, is sent with the mercenaries. — τὸ τῶν θεῶν — τὸ τῆς τύχης. Cf. § 12, τὰ τῆς τὐχης. εὐμενὲς is pred. to τὸ τῶν θεῶν. Others take τὸ εὑμενὲς as subj., and translate, the favor of the gods and that of fortune. — ψήψισμα κενὸν, an empty (i.e., unexecuted) vote. Cf. § 19, 20, 30. — ἀλλ...ἀποστόλους, but your enemies deride, and your allies are in mortal fear of, such expeditions. ἀποστόλους, belonging in sense equally with καταγελῶσιν and τεθνᾶσι τῷ δέει, takes the case required by the latter expression. For the construction, see H. 544 e; L. & S. θνήσκω I, end. In explanation of the fear of the allies, see I. 8.

46. — ἔνα ἄνδρα: i.e., the general. D. may have in mind Chares, who was proverbial for making promises  $(i\pi v\sigma\chi\dot{\epsilon}\sigma\theta a)$  which he could not perform. — ἀπομίσθων, unpaid. The word has also the meaning paid off. — οἰ...ἀσιν = οἱ δὲ ῥαδίως ψευδόμευοι πρὸς ὑμᾶς ὑπὲρ ἀν ἀν ἐκείνος πράξη ἐνθάδ' ἀσιν. The idea is that the generals are recklessly  $(\dot{\rho}a\deltaίως)$  impeached by men who remain in Athens  $(\dot{\epsilon}v\theta\dot{\alpha}\delta\varepsilon)$ , and who have consequently no proper knowledge of the generals' deserts. ὑπὲρ here = περὶ. Cf. § 1. — ὅ τι ἄν τύχητε (sc. ψηφιζόμενοι), whatever you may happen to, at hap-hazard. — τί...προσδοκῶν, what must we expect ? καὶ gives emphasis to the question.

47.— ὅταν, when, does not correspond strictly with πῶς, how, of the preceding question. — στρατιώτας — μάρτυρας — δικαστὰς : pred. accus. — εἰθυνῶν. Cf. § 33, τὸν λόγον, note. δικαστὰς τῶν εἰθυνῶν are dikasts in suits in which an official's accounts are impeached. — ὑμᾶς: grammatically superfluous, but rhetorically emphatic. — τὰ ὑμέτερ' αὐτῶν. Cf. § 7, note. — αἰσχύνης. Cf. § 9, ἀσελγείας, note; § 37, ὑβρεως. — δὶς καὶ τρὶς: often used instead of δὶς ἢ τρίς. — κρίνεται περὶ θανάτου — ἀγωνίσασθαι περὶ θανάτου, is tried for his life — to contend at the risk of his life. See I. 8. — τὸν...θάνατον. Kidnapping, whether of free persons or slaves, and the stealing of clothes, especially from the baths, were common crimes at Athens, and were punished, like pocket-picking, burglary, temple-robbery, etc., with death. — τοῦ προσήκοντος: sc. θανάτον.

48.— οἱ μὲν...διασπᾶν, some, sauntering about (cf. § 10), say that Philip, in conjunction with the Lacedæmonians, is engaged in putting down the Thebans, and is breaking up the confederacies. τὰς πολιτείας διασπὰν, to wrest apart the republics, probably means, to dismember the Bæotian and Arcadian confederacies. I. 5. Philip never gratified the Spartans in the way described, but he may have encouraged them to hope that he would do so.—ώς—πέπομφέν: unusual, after φημί, for πεπομφέναι. G. 260, 2, N. 1; M. 92, 2, N. 1. This report may have been well founded, for, according to Arrian, Anab. 2, 14, 2, Darius Nothus represented to Alexander the Great that Philip had once contracted alliance with Artaxerxes.—ἐν...τειχίζειν. I. 18.—οἱ δέ—. Instead of adding another item of gossip, the orator breaks off, and concludes with a general statement.

49. — τὴν...κωλυσόντων, the absence of any to hinder him. Cf. § 23, τὴν παραταξομένην, note. — οὐ μέντοι γε (sc. οἰναι), yet by no means.

50.— ἐκεῖνο refers to what follows. — ἄπανθ΄...εὕρηται, and all that we ever yet expected any one to do for us, he has been found to have done against us. D. is of course thinking mainly of Philip, but speaks indefinitely, so as to include others by whose promises the Athenians have been deceived. Supply πράξας with εῦρηται, whose subject is to be taken from τινα; or ἄπανθ΄ may be the subject and πραχθέντα understood. — ἐν αὐτοῖς ἡμῖν, in our own hands. — τὰ δέοντα ...ἐγνωκότες, we shall have recognized the things needful, shall have a due appreciation of the situation. Cf. M. 29, N. 3. — ἄττα ποτ': For the use of ποτε, cf. § 35, τί δή ποτε, note. — ἀλλ'...είδέναι = ἀλλὰ δεῖ εὐ εἰδέναι ὅτι φαῦλ' ἔσται, ἀν μὴ, κ. τ. λ.

51, - Έγω μέν ούν: a common formula at the beginning of the epilogue to an oration, suggesting a contrast between the orator's own opinion or conduct and that of others. Cf. § 10, έγω μεν, note. — ούτ\* — τε. H. 859, fine print. — άλλοτε. I. 25, 26. — προς χάριν. Cf. § 38,  $\pi \rho \delta \varsigma \dot{\eta} \delta \sigma \nu \dot{\eta} \nu$ , note. —  $\ddot{\sigma}$  τι  $\ddot{\alpha} \nu \dots \dot{\omega}$ . The subj. with  $\ddot{\alpha} \nu$ , which would have stood after αἰροῦμαι λέγειν, is here retained, although the principal verb is put in a past tense. M. 77 (not 62, Rem.). If the principal clause had had a single verb, e.g., εἶπον, instead of εἰλόμην λέγειν, the use of the opt, in the relative clause would have been obligatory. ά γιγνώσκω. Ι. 60. — πεπαρρησίασμαι. Ι. 26. — έβουλόμην...εἰπόντι, But I wish that, as I know that it is profitable to you to hear the best advice, I likewise knew that it would be profitable also to him who gives the best advice (i.e., to me). For ἐβουλόμην ἀν, see H. 752; G. 226, 2 (b), end. Most interpreters supply after  $\epsilon i\delta \hat{\epsilon} \nu a \iota$ , as its object,  $\tau \hat{\sigma} \tau \hat{a}$ βέλτιστα είπεῖν, with which συνοῖσον agrees. Perhaps it should rather be τὸ ὑμᾶς τὰ βέλτιστα ἀκούειν: The sense is the same in either case. - νῦν δ'. Cf. § 42, note. — ἐπ'...γενησομένοις, in spite of the uncertainty as to the consequences to me of this course (lit. in the consequences, etc., being uncertain. — ἐπὶ τώ...πεπείσθαι, in the conviction, etc.

ANALYSIS.

Procemium: The uselessness of opposing Philip with words and not with deeds, §§ 1-5.

- $I_1 a$ . Prothesis, § 6.
  - b. Philip favored the Thebans—and, in like manner, the Argives and Messenians—rather than the Athenians, because he believed the former would be more pliant to his plans, §§ 7-12;
  - c. not because he recognized in the cause of Thebes the cause of justice, § 13:
  - d. nor yet under compulsion, an explanation contradicted by his present attitude, §§ 14-16;
  - e. rather, the temper of Athens and the ambition of Philip are irreconcilable with one another, §§ 17–19.
- II. a. Substance of a former address of Demosthenes to the Messenians and Argives, warning them by the example of Olynthus and Thessaly against trusting Philip, §§ 20-25.
  - b. The neglect of these warnings by the Peloponnesians cannot be imitated by Athens with equal excuse; introduction of reply, §§ 26-28 to λέξω.

- III, a. The authors of the present peace ought to be called to account, that the penalty for coming disasters may be visited where it is deserved, §§ 28 from  $\bar{\eta}\nu \ \mu \hat{\epsilon} \nu \ o \bar{\nu} \nu$ , -36;
  - b. which disasters may the gods yet avert, § 37.
- 1. λόγοι γίγνωνται, speeches are made. γίγνεσθαι is often used as a passive to the middle ποιείσθαι. — περλ... βιάζεται, concerning what Philip is doing and forcibly carrying on; or simply, concerning Philip's violent acts. Ι. 62. — την εἰρήνην; the Peace of Philokrates. I. §§ 30 ff. — τους...λόγους, the patriotic speeches, in contrast with the utterances of Philip's partisans. — φιλανθρώπους, kind, i.e., expressive of sympathy with humiliated Greece. — φαινομένους — δοκούντας, evidently are — are thought. While φαίνεσθαι with an inf. is used like δοκέω to denote an appearance which may be illusory, with a supplementary participle or pred. adj. it denotes the manifestation of a fact. Cf. H. 802. - λέγειν μέν τα δέοντα - γιγνόμενον δ' οὐδὲν τῶν δεόντων. Notice the contrast. — ώς έπος είπειν, I might almost say, or, almost. H. 772; G. 268. The common use of the phrase is to soften a preceding, or, less often, a following  $\pi \tilde{a} \varsigma$  or  $o\dot{v} \delta \epsilon i \varsigma$ . Cf. IX, 47. —  $\mathbf{\hat{\omega}v} = \tau ο \hat{v} \tau \omega \mathbf{v}$   $\mathbf{\hat{\omega}v}$ . By the things for whose sake it is worth while to listen to these speeches  $(\tau a \tilde{v} \tau a)$  D. means practical results.
- 2. μάλλον και φανερώτερον, better and more plainly. τὸ συμβουλεῦσαι. The article is separated from its inf., as in IV, 51,  $τ\tilde{\varphi}$   $\pi \epsilon \pi \epsilon i \sigma \theta a \iota$ .
- 3. αἴτιον...ὅτι, and the reason for this is that. πάντες: distributed below into ἡμεῖς οἱ παριόντες and ὑμεῖς οἱ καθήμενοι. δέον. Η. 792 a; G. 278, 2. οἱ παριόντες. I. 60. τούτων refers to ἔργφ καὶ πράξεσιν. The infinitives γράφειν and συμβουλεύειν are in apposition with τούτων, and specify the actions which are the duty of orators. γράφειν. I. 60. τὴν...ἀπέχθειαν, unpopularity with you. In the proper connection the same words might mean, hatred towards you. οἶα...διεξερχόμεθα, but we rehearse what he is doing, what dangerous and intolerable things. The position of δέ makes ποιεῖ emphatic. It often has for this purpose the third or fourth place in a clause. ταῦτα is an emphatic repetition of οἶα... χαλεπά. ἔπειθ'. Cf. IV, 3, ἔπειτα, note. ὡς μὲν...παρεσκεύασθε (lit. how you might speak...you are better provided), you are better equipped than Philip for speaking, etc. Similarly the following clause: but to prevent...you are wholly inefficient. Cf. M. pp. 70, 140.
- 4.— συμβαίνει...λόγοι, There results, therefore, a state of things, necessary, I think, and, I may say ( $l\sigma\omega_s$ ), deserved: you are each better off in those things on which you each spend time and pains, he in actions, but you in words. After  $\tau a \bar{\nu} \tau a$ , which is nom., as appears from at  $\pi \rho \dot{a} \xi \varepsilon \iota \zeta$  and of  $\lambda \dot{o} \gamma o \iota$ , supply  $\sigma v \mu \beta \dot{a} \dot{\iota} v \varepsilon \iota$  from the beginning of the sentence. Or, perhaps better, the words  $\pi \rho \ddot{a} \gamma \mu a ... \varepsilon \dot{\iota} \kappa \dot{o} \zeta$  may be taken as parenthetical,  $\pi \rho \ddot{a} \gamma \mu a$  being in apposition with the sentence,  $\sigma v \mu - \beta \dot{a} \dot{\iota} v \varepsilon \iota \tau a \ddot{\iota} \tau a \ddot{\iota} \mu \varepsilon \iota v v \varepsilon \chi \varepsilon \iota v$ . —  $\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \varepsilon \iota v$  δικαιότερα, to make juster speeches than Philip could make.

5.—καὶ μηὶ...ἡμῶς, and that they may not sink (lit. proceed) still further, unnoticed by us all. H. 801; G. 279, 4.—μηδ΄...δυνάμεως, nor a great power rise against us. With μέγεθος δυνάμεως, cf. Cæs. B. Civ., 1, 64, tanta magnitudo fluminis.—τρόπος: sc. ἔστι.— ὄσπερ: sc. ἤν.— τῶν ῥάστων...ἡδίστων: dependent upon the prep. in προαιρετέον.—The foregoing procemium is hardly appropriate to the oration which follows; for whereas the procemium insists upon the necessity for active measures instead of words, no active measures are recommended in the oration.

6. — Πρῶτον μέν. The division of topics here begun is lost sight of, and the expected ἐπειτα nowhere follows. — θαρρεῖ, feels no alarm. — ἀκοῦσαι διὰ βραχέων, to hear briefly; a condensed expression for, to hear me state briefly. — δι' οὖς — δι' ὧν. With the acc. διά denotes cause, with the gen., instrument. In this passage the distinction is inappreciable. — τἀναντία...προσδοκᾶν, I have been led (lit. it has occurred to me) to expect the contrary. — προσθήσεσθε: a case of anacoluthon. In place of a subj. dependent upon ἐνα, an independent fut. indic. is substituted.

7.— λογίζομαι, reason or argue as follows. — Πυλών, κ. τ. λ. I. 35, 36. — τί δή ποτε. Cf. IV, 35, note. — πρὸς πλεονεξίαν... ἐξετάζων, estimating his calculations by reference to self-aggrandizement and the bringing everything under his own control; or, as it is meant that he adopted or rejected plans according as they did or did not conform to his standard, we may freely translate, choosing his course by reference to, etc.

8. — οὐδὲν...ποιήσειεν, could not promise nor perform anything of such importance. — ὑφ' οὖ, that by it. M. 65, 1, N. 5; G. 237, N.; H. 822. — τινὰs. In the Ionic dialect the indef. pronoun often stands between the genitive of the article and its noun (e.g., τῶν τις Ἑλλήνων); in Attic this position is allowed only when an attributive word follows the article, as here, ἄλλων. — προεῦσθε: aor. opt. The force of the preceding ἀν continues in the rel. clause. — λόγον ποιούμενοι, having regard. — ττν...πράγματι. These words might also be arranged τὴν τῷ πράγματι προσοῦσαν ἀδοξίαν, or τὴν προσοῦσαν τῷ πράγματι ἀδοξίαν, or τὴν τῷ πράγματι ἀδοξίαν προσοῦσαν (H. 532 a), but of these arrangements the first would occasion the concurrence of three short syllables (-ματι προσ-), while the second and third would occasion a hiatus (-ματι ἀδο-). See I. 61. — όμοίως — ὅστερ ἄν εἰ, just as if. There is an ellipsis of ἐναντιωθείστε after ὅσπερ ἀν. Η. 754; G. 212, 3. — τι τοιοῦτον, any such thing as the subjugation of any Hellenic community, implied in line 7.

9. — ὅπερ συνέβη (lit. which happened), as proved to be the case. — ἀντι...γιγνομένων, in return for their own gains. — οὐχ ὅπως, not only not. οὐχ ὅτι (or ὅπως), μὴ ὅτι (or ὅπως), elliptical for οὐ λέγω ὅτι, μὴ λεγέτω τις ὅτι, set aside a statement either as unimportant (= not to speak of the fact that) or untrue (= far from saying that). In the former case they are to be translated not only, in the latter, not only not. — Μεσσηνίους — ᾿Αργείους. I. 38. — ταὐτὰ ὑπειληφώς, because he entertained the same opinions of them as of the Thebans. — καθ' ὑμῶν ἐγκώμιον, eulogy upon you. This use of κατά with the genitive in a sense the reverse of hostile is not common.

10. — κέκρισθε — ἄν — προέσθαι, you have been judged that you would betray; or, idiomatically, the judgment has been expressed that you, etc. — κέρδους: gen. of value. Similarly χάριτος and ὡφελείας, below. — τὰ κοινὰ... Ἑλλήνων: i.e., the right to freedom. — ὡς ἐτέρως (lit. how otherwise!), quite otherwise. Similarly ὡς ἄλλως, below, § 32; IV, 27, ὡς ἀληθῶς.

11. — έξον. Cf. § 3, δέον, note. — ώστ'... ύπακούειν. Η. 770, fine print; G. 266, 2. — βασιλεί. H. 530 a, end. — 'Αλέξανδρος. Alexander I of Macedon was despatched by Mardonius shortly before the battle of Platæa (479 B.C.) to offer to Athens friendship and increase of territory, on condition of her joining the Persian alliance. The Athenians rejected these overtures, and were obliged to take refuge a second time in Salamis, while their city was occupied by the Persians. It looks as if Demosthenes, in the words την χώραν... προελομένους, had in mind the first as well as the second abandonment of the city, and in πράξαντας...δεδύνηται, the battle of Salamis as well as that of Platæa. Accuracy in historical allusions is not a characteristic of the Greek orators. — ό τούτων πρόγονος. τούτων refers to the Macedonian royal family. — παθείν... ύπομείναντας, dared to endure any suffering. For ότιοῦν, see IV, 19, όντινοῦν, note. - λέγειν - είπειν. The word seems to be changed merely for the sake of variety, and the difference of tense to be unessential. λέγειν and εἰπεῖν are often thus joined. — η ως...είποι, than one could express in words (lit. by his speech). ή ώς after a comparative is usually followed by an infinitive. H. 660 c. - τους μέν - τους δ': in partitive apposition with τους  $\pi\rho o\gamma \delta vov c$ . The Thebans fought side by side with the Persians at Platæa; the Argives were prevented by hatred of Sparta from taking any part in the struggle.

12. — ίδια modifies λυσιτελοῦν. — ἐπὶ τοῖς δικαίοις, on just conditions; i.e., on the condition of justice in the relations between himself and you. — δια ταῦτ': i.e., διὰ τὸ ἡγεῖσθαι, κ. τ. λ. The plurals ταῦτα, τάδε, etc., are often thus used of single facts. - καl τότε καl νῦν. With this combination of adverbs the verb is regularly in the present, as here. τότε refers to the time of the conclusion of the Peace, or immediately after. — οὐ γάρ, κ. τ. λ. The argument is: No explanation can be given why Philip should prefer the friendship of the Thebans and Argives to that of the Athenians, except his reliance on the subservience of the former to his own interests; for (1) their naval strength is nothing to that of Athens, nor (2) is it Philip's policy to gain an exclusively non-maritime power (in the building up of which Athens might reasonably be neglected), nor (3) has Philip forgotten his sworn obligations. This process of excluding other explanations than that assigned by the orator, is continued in §§ 13-15. See the Analysis. -- οὐδ' ἐν...ἀφέστηκεν, nor has he acquired some empire in the interior, but renounced that over the sea and the commercial ports; or, the μέν-clause being here, as often, logically subordinate to the  $\delta \varepsilon$ -clause, we may translate: nor has he, after acquiring some empire in the interior, renounced that over the sea and the commercial ports (which would show an incomprehensible inconsistency and lack of ambition).  $\mu \hat{\epsilon} \nu$  is inserted into the text, contrary to the reading of the Zürich edition, on the authority of most MSS. On  $\tau \iota \nu$ , see H. 683 c.

13. — 'Αλλὰ νη Δί', But by Heaven. Cf. IV, 10, νη Δί', note. — ώς ...είδώς, pretending to understand all these matters. H. 795 e; G. 277, N. 2. — ὧν = τούτων â. — τῷ...ἀξιοῦν, on account of the fact that the Thebans made juster requests than you. The Thebans asked for Orchomenus, Koroneia, etc. I. 36. — ἀλλά...εἰπεῖν, But of all arguments, this one it is preëminently (lit. even alone) impossible for him now to urge. — Μεσσήνην...κελεύων. I. 38. Sparta, Demosthenes implies, had more right to Messene, than Thebes to Orchomenus and Koroneia. — τῷ...εἶναι = τῷ νομίζειν ταῦτ' εἰναι δίκαια.

14. — νη Δία. Cf. § 13. — τοῦτο, this argument. — παρὰ γνώμην, contrary to his resolution. — ἐν μέσω ληφθείς, caught between. I. 36. — καλῶς, very good; spoken ironically. — λογοποιοῦσι περιιόντες. Cf. IV, 10, 48. — Ἐλάπειαν. The walls of this, as of the other Phokian towns, had been razed in 346. I. 36. It appears from the last sentence of § 15 that Philip's alleged intention in regard to the place was supposed to look toward the reëstablishment of the Phokian nation.

15. — μέλλει και μελλήσει. D. repeats sarcastically the μέλλειν of the preceding sentence in a different sense; see L. &. S. μέλλω Ι and III. But these things he is going and will be going to do; i.e., they belong and always will belong to the future, will never be realized. - Mεσσηνίοις - 'Apyelois: datives of advantage. - έπι...συμβάλλειν = συμβάλλειν τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις. L. & S. συμβάλλω II, 1, end. The common construction would be awkward here on account of the preceding datives. — οὐ μέλλει, is not going to, i.e., he is already doing it. - ξένους...προσδόκιμος. Ι. 38. - τους μεν όντας: contrasted with οθς δ' ἀπώλεσεν. The asyndetic introduction of the sentence is emphatic. Is he engaged in destroying the Lacedæmonians, the existing enemies of the Thebans, but trying now to save the Phokians, whom he himself formerly destroyed? Or, as the μένclause is here logically subordinate to the  $\delta \epsilon$ -clause (cf. § 12, and note), we may translate: Is he, though engaged, etc., trying now, The absurdity of supposing that he is doing anything for the Phokians, enemies of Thebes, is implied by the two facts, Λακεδαιμονίους ἀναιρεῖ, and οῦς ἀπώλεσεν αὐτός. But is the argument a cogent one?

16. — And who could believe these things (the statements in § 14)? Impossible! for I, for my part (cf. IV, 10, ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ and note), do not even suppose (not to speak of believing, referring to the preceding πιστεύσειεν) that Philip, either if he had at first acted under compulsion (and) against his will, or if he were now abandoning the Thebans, would be maintaining a constant opposition to their enemies (i.e., the Lacedæmonians). The argument, if stated syllogistically, would have the form: If either a or b were true, c would not be true; but c is true; therefore neither a nor b is true.  $a\nu$  in l. 14 (repeated in 1. 15; cf. IV, 1, note) belongs with ἐναντιοῦσθαι. H. 783 b; G. 211. -- έκ...συντάττων, But from all his actions, if one takes the right view of them, it appears that he is busy contriving all his schemes against the city. A better sense, however, is given by substituting the conjectural reading  $\pi \acute{a} \nu \theta'$   $\acute{a}$  for  $\pi \acute{a} \nu \tau a$ . This would require a comma instead of a period after ποιήσας, and would make συντάττων a second supplementary participle after δῆλός ἐστι.

17. — τοῦτο, this direction of all his plans against Athens. — τρότον τιν', in some sort. — νῦν γε δη, now at least, when his unjust treatment of Athens has become so evident. — άδικε, has been acting unjustly. Cf. IV, 24, στρατεύεται, note. — oîş. H. 810, and a, end; G. 153, N. 1. — 'Αμφίπολιν — Ποτίδαιαν. I. 15, 17. — προεῖτο: aor. indic. The conclusion is  $\mathring{a}v$  ήγεῖτο. Notice the difference of tense. H. 746; G. 222.

18. — ἀμφότερα: explained by καὶ ἐαντὸν...αἰσθανομένους. Η. 502 b. — ἐαντὸν ἐπιβουλεύοντα. The usual construction would be αὐτὸς ἐπιβουλεύον (Η. 796 a), but the acc. is here used for the sake of parallelism with ὑμᾶς αἰσθανομένους. Cf. M. 113, N. 2. — εὖ...νομίζοι, and since (or if) he supposes that you have common sense, he would be justified in thinking that you hate him. The implication is that any other feeling toward Philip would be a sign of imbecility. For ἀννομίζοι, see H. 722 b.— φθάση ποιήσας. L. & S. φθάνω III, 1, end; H. 801; G. 279, 4. The addition of πρότερος is pleonastic. Cf. IV, 14, μὴ πρότερον προλαμβάνετε. — ἐφέστηκεν, he stands threateningly by. The following ἐπὶ is used in the same hostile sense. — τοὺς...τούτοις (lit. those who wish the same things with them), those who belong to the same party with them (i.e., with the Thebans). For τούτοις dependent upon ταὐτὰ, see H. 603; G. 186.

19. — σκαιότητα τρόπων, stupidity of character. In the case of the Bæotians, stupidity was proverbial. — τῶν μετὰ ταῦτ' (lit. of the things after these), of the consequences. — σωφρονοῦσί γε καὶ μετρίως, to men who have even a moderate degree of sober sense. The word σωφρονοῦσί means at once moderate in desires, as opposed to πλεονεξία, and sensible, as opposed to σκαιότης τρόπων. — παραδείγματα, warnings. — ἄ...συνέβη. Ι. 38. — εἰρῆσθαι. ΄ Cf. IV, 19, δεδόχθαι — παρεσκενάσθαι, and note.

20. — Πῶς... Ὁλυνθίους, I said, namely, With what vexation do you think, men of Messene, that the Olynthians used to listen. γὰρ probably does not belong to the original question, but serves to introduce the quotation. L. & S. γάρ Π. For ἀκούειν, as also προσδοκᾶν in this section and § 22, cf. IV, 23, τρέφειν — συστραπεύεσθαι, and note. — εἰ...λέγοι. Η. 749 a; G. 225; M. 51. — ᾿Ανθεμοῦντα — Ποτίδαιαν. Ι. 17. — τὴν ἔχθραν τὴν πρὸς ἡμῶς, our hostility. Cf. § 3, τὴν πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἀπέχθειαν. — ἀνήρητο — ἐδεδώκει. These pluperfects, denoting completed actions, refer to the time immediately succeeding that to which the preceding imperfect refers. And so was himself the bearer, etc. — τοιαῦτα: i.e., such things as they now are suffering. — λέγοντος...πιστεῦσαι. This is the dependent form of the sentence, λέγοντός τινος (gen. abs. expressing condition) ἐπίστευσαν ἄν. For the position of ἀν, which belongs to the verb, see M. 42, 3, N. 1.

21. — τήν άλλοτρίαν: sc. χώραν. Η. 509 b; G. 141, N. 4. — πολύν:

sc. χρόνον. D. hopes to see Philip's power broken and Olynthus restored. Hence he says, for a long time, and not, for ever. — ἐκπεσόντες, expelled. I. 29. — οὐ γὰρ... ὁμιλίαι, for these too close connections with tyrants are not safe for republics. For λίαν and αὐται, cf. IV, 17, ἑξαίφνης and ταύτας, with note.

22.—τί δ' οἱ Θετταλοί, And how about the Thessalians? Η. 508 b.
— τοὺς τυράννους ἐξέβαλλε. Ι. 20.—πάλιν: for πάλων ὅτε.—Νίκαιαν—Μαγνησίαν. Ι. 36.—δεκαδαρχίαν. See I. 37. Another interpretation is that Philip established in each city of Thessaly a dekadarchy, like those created earlier by Sparta (I. 1), but this does not seem consistent with the use of the singular in our passage.—Πυλαίαν. Ι. 36.—τοῦτον...παραιρήσεσθαι. Ι. 37.—οὺκ ἔστι ταῦτα, this is impossible; i.e., they certainly did not expect these results.

23. — όσα τοιαύτα = ὅσα ἐστὶ τοιαῦτα.

24. — δαπάνης προσδείται, require expense besides. — τοῖς πλήθεσι, to peoples, popular governments. — οὐδέν...πάθητε. Cf. IV, 44, οὐδέποτ'... δεόντων, note.

25. — εἶτ'...ἔχοντα; Do you then not see that Philip has even his titles thoroughly incompatible with this? or, idiomatically, that Philip's very titles are thoroughly, etc. — πολέμου. The war between Messene and Sparta is meant.

26.—θορυβοῦντες...λέγεται, clamoring that they were rightly spoken, declaring with applause their approval. — πρέσβεων: D.'s colleagues on the embassy. Why D. separated from them (as is implied in πάλιν ὑστερον) is not known; perhaps to visit other Peloponnesian states. — παρόντος ἐμοῦ: gen. absol. — ὡς ἔοικεν: to be joined with what follows. The adhesion of the Messenians to Philip appeared from the embassy just arrived. I. 39. — οὐδὲν μάλλον (lit. no more), nevertheless not. — ἀτοπον, εί. Cf. IV, 43, θανμάζω — εί, with note. — παρ' ά... ὁρῶσι, contrary to what they perceive by their reason to be best. For the omission of ὄντα after ὁρῶσι, cf. IV, 18, εἰδὰς εὐτρεπεῖς ὑμᾶς, with note. — ἀλλ' ὑμεῖς. Instead of continuing, But this is strange, that you seeing the better, should follow the worse, the orator substitutes an express and gloomy prophecy. Cf. § 6, προσθήσεσθε.

27. — περιτειχίζεσθε. The commoner reading is περιστοιχίζεσθε, which is more appropriate. The word repeats in the form of a metaphor the meaning of ἐπιβουλεύεσθε, you are plotted against. I. 62. ἄστε...ποιήσαι, on condition of doing nothing at once. See § 11, ὥστ', with note. The reading ἐκ τοῦ μηδὲν ἡδη ποιῆσαι (or ποιεῖν), which is well supported, gives better sense.

28. — πρακτέων. Oblique cases of the verbal adjective in τέος are very uncommon.—καθ' ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς, by yourselves; i.e., after the withdrawal of the envoys from the assembly. I. 39. The phrase is to be joined with βουλεύσεσθε. — ἄ...λέξω, but the answer, by making which now, you would have voted what you ought, this I will read; or freely, but the answer which you should at once vote, I will read. After λέξω most editions insert, without MS. authority, the lemma or heading, ΑΠΟΚΡΙΣΙΣ. It may be, however, that the answer proposed by D. was not read till the conclusion of the speech. — ἦν ... δίκαιον. Η. 703; G. 222, N. 2. The μὲν here, as often when thus conjoined with οὖν, has no following correlative. — τοὺς ἐνεγκόντας, κ. τ. λ. I. 31, at the beginning. — καλεῖν, to summon, for the purpose, apparently, of calling them to account for their conduct. Cf. L. & S. καλέω I, 4.

29. — πρεσβεύειν. I. 31. — οίδ' ότι, certainly. H. 868 a. The phrase came to be used as a mere adverb, as appears from its often being placed in the middle or even at the end of a sentence. — καλ...καλείν, Yes, and again we ought to summon others. — τούς...λέγοντας, Those who, when I, etc. — said. Æschines and Philokrates are meant. I. 35. The article and its participle are seldom so widely separated as here. — τῆς ἐπὶ τοὺς ὅρκους, the one sent to receive the oaths of Philip and his allies. I. 33. — διεμαρτυρόμην, protested. — οὐκ εἴων, tried to prevent. οὐκ ἐάω is used almost like a compound, in the sense to prevent. For the tense, see H. 702; G. 200, N. 2.

30. — ώς... ἄνθρωπος, that I, being a water-drinker, was naturally an ill-tempered and crabbed sort of man. For τις, see H. 683; L. & S. τις A, 8. — ἐἀν παρέλθη: sc. είσω Πυλῶυ. See L. & S. παρέρχομαι VI, 2. — τοῖς αὐτοῦ τέλεσι, at his own expense. — διορύξει. A canal cutting off the Chersonesus from the mainland would have been a safeguard against the attacks of Thracian tribes. — οῖδ΄ ὅτι. See § 29, note. — οῦ δεινοὶ — μεμνῆσθαι, not good at remembering. D. sneers at the readiness of the Athenians to forget injuries.

31. — τδ...αἴσχιστον: in apposition with the following sentence. H. 501, 502; G. 137, N. 3. — τοῖς ἐκγόνοις...ἐψηφίσασθε. I. 35, near the end. — πρὸς τὰς ἐλπίδας, conformably to your hopes; i.e., not waiting for any experience of the benefits of the peace, but relying on the hopes excited by Philip. The phrase is to be joined with ἑψηφίσασθε. — οὕτω...ὑπήχθητε, so completely were you taken in. — δεῖν: used with the sense of an imperfect. Cf. § 28, ἡν δίκαιον.

32. — ούχ...ποιήσω, Not that, lapsing into invective, I may for myself gain a hearing with merin like manner (έξ loov) with them. D. implies that his opper the secure attention by the abusiveness of their language in regard to himself and his party, and says that it is not for the sake of requiring them in kind that he wishes them to be

33. — και ούχι...φοβοῦμαι δὲ, and though I (lit. should not wish to judge rightly) hope I may be mistaken, yet I fear. — τοῦτ refers to the calamity prophesied at the end of § 32. — ἀμελεῖν ἐξουσία. Η. 767; G. 261, 1. — τοῦ δεῖνος. Cf. IV, 19, τὸν δεῖνα, note.

34. — ἐψ' οἶs, the objects for which. — δεδωροδοκηκόσι. Η. 799 a; G. 280, N. 2; also I. 31. — τῶν...ἀπολωλότων (gen. part. depending on τι) of the losses occasioned by them. — ὡς τὰ πολλὰ, for the most part, generally. — ἐνίους. D. means the Athenians. — τοὺς ὑπὸ χεῖρα, those who come first to hand.

35. — μέλλει...πράγματα, events belong to the future and are taking shape.—τίς...προέσθαι = τίς ἐστιν ὁ πείσας καὶ ποιήσας ὑμᾶς προέσθαι Φωκέας καὶ Πύλας. Æschines is meant. I. 35.— ἐπὶ— εἰs. The preposition is changed for variety merely. So below,  $\pi \epsilon \rho i - i \pi \epsilon \rho$ . — τών δικαίων, your rights, as determined by the Peace. - δs... ήμέρα, which will afflict each man when it comes, but which began on that day. Yéyove has the strict use of the perfect (= has begun), and thus differs from an aorist, which would be used of an event that came into being and passed away; but being coupled, according to a Greek idiom, with an adverbial expression referring to the time of beginning, it is best rendered by the English simple preterite. Cf. Dem. xxxviii, 8, πάντα ταῦτα ἀφεῖται τότε; Plato, Krito, 44, Α, ἔκ τινος ἐνυπνίου δ έώρακα δλίγου πρότερου; also the commoner combination of the present with the adverb πάλαι. D. means to say that a war for the possession of Attic territory is already virtually begun; it dates from the day when Æschines persuaded the people to abandon Phokis and Thermopylæ.

36. — πράγμα, trouble. —ναυσί κρατήσας, having conquered at sea. Philip's navy was still small, compared with that of Athens. Cf. IV, 22, note. — Φωκέας =  $\tau \gamma \nu$  Φωκίδα. — ὁμοίω...όν, a war like that on account of which. The Greek uses relatives (οἰος, ὅσπερ, ὅς) after ἰσος, ὁμοῖος, παρομοῖος, παραπλήσιος, in the same way as after τοιοῦτος.

37. — ταῦτ'...θεοί, For admonishing you then of these things enough has now been said, but that they should ever be put to stringent test (i.e., that the truth of my words should be proved by experience), may it not happen, all ye gods!  $\dot{\omega}_{\zeta}$  is used with  $\dot{\nu}\pi \rho \mu \nu \bar{\rho} \sigma a \iota$  to express purpose. G. 266, 2, N. 1; M. 98, 2, N. 1. The second  $\dot{\omega}_{\zeta}$  is equivalent to  $\ddot{\nu}\tau \iota$ , and the clause  $\dot{\omega}_{\zeta}...\dot{\alpha}\kappa \rho \iota \beta \bar{\omega}_{\zeta}$  is the subject of  $\gamma \dot{\epsilon} \nu \sigma \iota \tau \sigma$ . This is better than the explanation given in M. 65, 1, N. 4.— δίκαιος. L. & S. δίκαιος C.

IX.

ANALYSIS.

I. - PROŒMIUM, §§ 1-5.

- a. In spite of incessant talking, affairs are at the worst possible pass, § 1
- b. This is chiefly the fault of Athenian statesmen, § 2.
- c. A plea for plain-speaking, §§ 3, 4.
- d. Encouragement may be drawn from the most disgraceful feature of the political situation, § 5.

II. - IS PHILIP OBSERVING THE PEACE? §§ 8-20.

- a. Prothesis, §§ 8, 9.
- b. Philip's policy of deferring to the last moment the formal announcement of hostile intentions, illustrated by his dealings with Olynthus, Phokis, Pheræ, and Oreos, is, à fortiori, to be expected in the case of Athens, §§ 10-14.
- c. Specific proofs that Philip has violated both the spirit and the letter of the treaty, §§ 15-20.

III. - THE UNIVERSAL DANGER AND INDIFFERENCE, §§ 21-46.

- a. Philip is permitted to exercise in Greece an authority which was never permitted to any Greek state, §§ 21-25.
- b. A catalogue of injuries inflicted by him upon Greece, §§ 26, 27.
- c. Against these injuries there is no common resentment or resistance, §§ 28-33.
- d. Nay, even personal wrongs are tamely submitted to, §§ 34, 35.
- e. This shameful apathy is due to the corruption now prevalent in public men, and the degeneracy of sentiment in regard to such corruption, $\$ 36-46.

IV. - THE DUTIES OF ATHENS, §§ 47-76.

- a. In view of the effective innovations introduced by Philip into the methods of warfare, Athens must keep the war as far as possible from Attic soil, §§ 47-52.
- b. The necessity of withstanding the philippizing party at home illustrated by the cases of Olynthus, Eretria, and Oreos, §§ 53-62.
- c. The root of the evil is the general reluctance to face disagreeable facts, §§ 63, 64.
- d. To yield to Philip can bring nothing but misery, §§ 65-67.
- e. While there is yet time, Athens must strain every nerve to bring about a general alliance against Philip, taking herself the lead in opposing him, §§ 68-75.
- f. Peroration, § 76.

1. — γιγνομένων. See VI, 1, γίγνωνται, note. — ὀλίγου δεῖν. H. 772; G. 268. — περι...ἀδικεῖ, concerning the wrongs which Philip has been committing, etc. On ἀδικεῖ, see IV., 23, στρατεύεται, note. — ἀφ' οῦ. H. 813 a. — τὴν εἰρήνην. I. 30 ff. — και πάντων...ὅπως, and while all would certainly say, though they do not carry this out in deed, that it is needful to speak and to act in such manner that. For οἰδ ὅτι, see

VI, 29, note. φησάντων and ποιοῦσι are contrasted, and τοῦτο refers to λέγειν καὶ πράττειν ὁπως, κ. τ. λ. λέγειν is used of speeches in the assembly. — ὑπηγμένα — καὶ προειμένα, drawn on and allowed to slide. — δέδοικα... ἢ, I fear lest it may be a harsh thing to say, and yet true; I fear that, though it is a hard saying, it is yet true. For the logical relation of the μέν-clause to the δί-clause, cf. VI, 12, 15. The hard truth is expressed in the sentence, εἰ...διατεθήναι, which, being explanatory, is asyndetic. — εἰ καὶ — καὶ, if both — and. — οἱ παριόντες. I. 60. — ἐξ ὧν...ἔξειν, measures in consequence of which affairs were likely to be in the worst possible condition. ἔμελλε is assimilated in tense to ἐβούλοντο. Cf. IV, 2, προσήκε, note. — ἀν — δύνασθαι. Η. 783 b; G. 211. — διατεθήναι: how different from διακεῖσθαι in meaning?

2.— παρ'. See IV, 11, note.— εὐρήσετε: sc. ἀφιγμένα.— ἐν οἷς... φυλάττοντες, engaged in maintaining the conditions under which they themselves enjoy distinction and power.— τοὖς... ὄντας, those who are at the head of affairs; the same class as that referred to by τωὲς above.— οὐδὲν ἔσται, aim at nothing else than that the city may inflict punishment on itself (i.e., on its own citizens, τῶν ἐπὶ τοῖς πράγμασιν ὄντων) and be engaged in this task.

3.— πολιτείαι, political methods.— ἐπὶ μὲν τῶν ἄλλων, in other cases, everywhere else; contrasted with ἐκ δὲ τοῦ συμβουλεύειν below.— ξένοις = μετοίκοις. — πολλοὺς, κ. τ. λ. The comparatively unoppressive treatment of slaves in Athens is attested also by Xen. On the Athenian State, 1, 12.— ἐνίαις. D. refers to oligarchical cities.— ἐκ... ἐξεληλάκατε, but from the speeches of the assembly you have banished it (i e., τὴν παρρησίαν) altogether.

4.— εθ', therefore. — τρυφάν, to be fastidious; or perhaps, to put on airs. — τοις πράγμασι και τοις γιγνομένοις, the interests of the State and the events of the day. — ούτω: sc. ωστε τρυφάν και κολακεύεσθαι. — ούκ... λέγω, I know not what to say. H. 735 b; G. 244. — έτοιμος. See IV, 29, note.

5. — τὸ χείριστον... βελτίω: repeated with slight variations from IV, 2, which see. — νῦν δὲ. See IV, 42, note. — οὐδ' ἤττησθε...κεκίνησθε, nor have you been defeated; on the contrary, you have not even stirred. There is an ambiguity, probably intentional, in the words, οὐδὲ κεκίνησθε, which may mean either, you have not even been dislodged from your position, or, you have not even bestirred yourselves.

8. — ἴν' ἐντεῦθεν ἄρξωμαι, to begin with this. H. 739, at the end. — ταὐτα: i.e., ὅτι ἔξεστιν εἰρήνην ἄγειν τῆ πόλει καὶ ἐφ' ἡμῖν ἑστι τοῦτο. — ἔτερος, i.e., Philip. — ὑμῖν προβάλλει, holds before you, cajoles you with. — φάσκειν...διαφέρομαι, But to your pretending to be at peace, as he does, if you prefer, I do not object; i.e., I do not insist upon a formal renunciation of the peace, provided you will go as far as Philip in virtual violation of it.

9. — ταύτην εἰρήνην. H. 513 c. What shows that εἰρήνην is pred. acc.? — πρῶτον μὲν — ἔπειτα. See IV, 3, note. — ἐκείνω...λέγει. The phrases ἐκείνω παρ' ὑμῶν and ὑμῖν παρ' ἐκείνου are pred. modifiers of τὴν εἰρήνην, with which understand οὐσαν. The sentence therefore = ἡ εἰρήνη ἡν λέγει ἐκείνω παρ' ὑμῶν ἐστιν, οὐχ ὑμῖν παρ' ἐκείνον, the peace which he speaks of is observed on (lit. from) your side toward him, not on his side toward you. Cf. H. 535 b, fine print; G. 142, 3, fine print. — χρημάτων: genitive of price. The reference is to money spent in bribes. — αὐτὸς...πολεμεῖσθαι; explanatory of τοῦτο.

10. — μέχρι τούτου: explained by  $\tilde{\epsilon}\omega\varsigma...\pi ολεμεῖν.$  — ois. See VI, 17, οἰς, note.

11. — τοῦτο μὲν — τοῦτο δ². H. 525 a, end; G. 148, N. 4. — 'Ολυνθίοις, κ. τ. λ. I. 29. — δυοῦν θάτερον, one of two things; best omitted in translation. Cf. VI, 18, ἀμφότερα, note. — αὐτον: sc. μὴ οἰκεῖν — πάντα...ἀπολογησομένους, though always before, if any one brought any such accusation against him, he was indignant and sent ambassadors to make a counter-statement. For the condition, εἰ αἰτιάσαιτο, see VI, 20, εἰ...λέγοι, note. As there the present infinitive, so here the present participles denote customary action in past time. G. 204, N. 1; M. 16, 2. With verbs of sending, purpose is generally expressed by the fut. partic. without the article. But cf. § 71, and M. 108, 2, N. 1. — ϵἰς Φωκέας, κ. τ. λ. I. 34, 35. — ἤριζον οἱ πολλοὶ, the majority (deceived by Æschines and such men) contended. — τὴν ἐκείνου πάροδον, his entrance, i.e., into Central Greece by the pass of Thermopylæ; cf. VI, 30, ἐὰν παρέλθη, note.

12. — Φερὰς, κ. τ. λ. Ι. 37. — ἔχει καταλαβών, seized and holds. G. 279, 1, N. 2. — μρείταις may depend upon either ἐφη οr πεπομφέναι. I. 41. — ἐπισκεψομένους: the regular word for the payment of a visit by physician to patient. The insulting jest is kept up in νοσοῦσι. — πυνθάνεσθαι γὰρ. Α γάρ-clause in oratio obliqua regularly takes the mode of the leading verb of the quotation. Cf. M. 70, 2, N. 3 (a). — αὐτοὺς. H. 726. — ὡς...στασιάζουσιν, that they were prostrated by party strifes. I. 62.

13. — Do you then suppose that toward those who could not have inflicted any injury, but could perhaps at most have saved themselves from suffering any, toward these, I say, he chose to act deceitfully, rather than to use force with fair warning, but that with you he will

14. — τῶν ἀδικουμένων... αὐτῷ, while you, the injured party, make no complaint against him. — ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν τρέπεσθαι, to turn (intransitive) against himself. — τῶν...μισθοφορούντων: i.e., Athenians like Æschines, in the pay of Philip. — ἀφέλουτο, should silence (lit. take away).

15.—'Aλλ'...ἀν; But, O in Heaven's name, is there any one who, in his senses, would from names rather than from facts judge of the one at peace or at war with him? i.e., judge whether one was at peace or at war with him? i.e., judge whether one was at peace or at war with him? — έξ ἀρχῆς. See IV, 14, note. — οὕπω Διοπείθους...ἀπεσταλμένων. I. 45. ἐν Χερρονήσω and νῦν modify ὅντων. — ἐλάμβανε — ἐξέβαλλεν. Notice the tense. — τοὺς ἐκ Σ...στρατιώτας. Η. 618 a, end; G. 191, N. 6. Cf. § 42, τὸν χρυσὸν τὸν ἐκ Μήδων. — στρατηγὸς: Chares. — εἰρήνην μὲν γὰρ ὁμωμόκει. γὰρ introduces the justification of the implication, — viz., he was doing flagrant injustice, — contained in the preceding question. μὲν has no expressed correlative, the antithetical clause — something like πόλεμον δὲ ἐποιεῖτο — being omitted. Cf. IV, 10, ἐγὰ μὲν γὰρ, note. In saying that Philip had given his oath at the time referred to, D. is guilty of a misrepresentation. See I. 33.

16. —τί δὲ ταῦτ' ἐστίν, But what do these things amount to? — εἰ μὲν...ἔμελεν, for whether these things are trifling, or you did not care about them, that is (lit. would be) another question. Forms of expression similar to this are of somewhat common occurrence, the εἰ-clause being sometimes, as here, dependently interrogative, and sometimes, as in Dem. xiii, 7, conditional. It is to be observed that the two interrogative clauses in our passage are not alternative or disjunctive; η = νεl, not an. For the use of μηδὲν, see H. 836, fine print; G. 283, 1, N. ἔμελεν refers to the time when the abovementioned conquests were being made. On οὐτος, cf. § 9, ταύτην εἰρήνην, note. — τὸ δ΄...δύναμιν, but whether one transgresses religion and justice in a small or in a greater matter, it is all one; i.e., a small violation shows as well as a great one one's character and intentions. For the position of τὸ εὐσεβὲς καὶ τὸ δίκαιον, see IV, 29, τοῦτ' ἀν, note; for ἀν τ' — ἄν τ', IV, 19, κὰν —κὰν, note. — φέρε δτ', well then. — νῦν, an emphatic now, modifies ποιεῖ. — βασιλεὺς, the king of Persia; cf. §§ 43, 47; VI, 11, note. — ἐγνώκασιν, have decided. There had probably been nothing more than a tacit admission of the Athenian claims to the Chersonese. — ξένους, κ. τ. λ. Ι. 46. — ἐπιστέλλει, announces by letter.

17. — φης: addressed to some assumed defender of Philip's course; indefinite second person. — ἐγὰ δὲ, κ. τ. λ. The skeleton of the sentence is: ἐγὰ δὲ τοσούτου δέω... ὁμολογεῖν... ὡστε... φημὶ, but I am so far from admitting...that I affirm, etc. D. means that in his view, Philip has violated the peace, not merely in this direct aggression upon Athens, but also in measures of interference in other states, affecting Athens only indirectly. The rigid construction here put upon Philip's obligations under the Peace is one to which Philip would never have assented. I. 37. — Μεγάρων... σκευωρούμενον. I. 40, 41, 43, 38. — τυραννίδα, tyranny, government by tyrants. Philip secured this form of government in two cities, Eretria and Oreos. — τὰ ἐν Π. σκευωρούμενον, carrying on his Peloponnesian intrigues. — ἔως ἄν — προσάγωσιν, until they are bringing. What different meaning would προσαγάγωσιν give?

18. —  $\tau$  (σιν οὖν, κ. τ. λ., By what facts, then, would you be imperiled, if anything should happen (i.e., if war should break out between you and Philip)? By the fact of the Hellespont's having passed into other hands, etc. A dative with κινδυνεύειν regularly denotes the thing which is risked (e.g., κινδυνεύειν τῷ σώματι = to risk one's person), but here the datives must be taken as expressing cause. The idea is that all these extensions of Philip's power, if he is allowed to complete them, will put Athens in a sad predicament in the event of war. — τἀκείνου φρονῆσαι. L. & S. φρονέω II, 2, b. Notice the inceptive meaning of the aor. — φῶ. H. 720, c; G. 256. Gildersleeve's Lat. Gram. 258.

19. — πολλοῦ γε καὶ δεῖ, far from it, a common formula with D., in which καὶ serves for emphasis. — ἀφὶ ἡς ἡμέρας = ἀπὸ τῆς ἡμέρας ἡ. H. 809, 2, 808 a; G. 154, N. — ἀνεῖλε Φωκέας. I. 36. — ὁρίζομαι, I affirm. The word literally means to bound or determine, and hence is suitable for fixing the date of beginning of an action. — τοῦθ'— ποιῆσαι: i.e., ἀμίνεσθαι. — καὶ — γε, Yes, and. Cf. VI, 29, καὶ πάλιν γ'. — τῶν ἄλλων τῶν συμβουλευόντων = τῶν ἄλλων ὑητόρων. When οἱ ἄλλοι is joined with a participle, the article is used twice. — οὖδὲ... Βυζαντίον, it does not even seem good to me.to deliberate now about the Chersonese nor Byzantium; i.e., I do not approve of treating the Chersonese or Byzantium as the main subject of consideration. I. 46.

20. — ἀλλ'...'Ελλήνων, but, while defending them (i.e., Chersonites and Byzantines) and watching to prevent anything from happening to them (cf. IV, 11, ἀν  $\tau\iota$  πάθη, note), to deliberate about all the Greeks. For the logical relation of the μèν- and μέντοι-clauses, see VI, 12, last note. — ἔξ ὧν, on what grounds. — πρόνοιαν...ποιήσησθε, may take some thought for yourselves, at any rate, unless perhaps you will for others ἄδ'well. For εἰ μἢ ἄρα (= nisi forte), see L. & S. ἄρα B, 6. — ληρεῖν καὶ τετυφώσθαι, to be a vain babbler. — προσέχητε, may give heed. L. & S. προσέχω 4, a.

21. — μέγας: proleptic. Cf. IV, 8, ἀθάνατα, note. — ἐκ...ἀρχὰς, from being insignificant and contemptible at the outset. The phrase τὸ κατ ἀρχὰς is an adverbial accusative. — αὐτοὺς = ἀλλήλους. Cf. IV, 10, αὐτῶν, note. — ἐξ ἐκείνου: i.e., ἐκ μικροῦ καὶ ταπεινοῦ. — ἢ νῦν...ποιήσασθαι, than for him now, when he has already made so many acquisitions, to get under his heel what remains also. On ποιήσασθαι, see H. 716; G. 202, 1.

22. — ἀφ' ὑμῶν ἀρξαμένους, beginning from you, with you at the head. — ὑπὲρ οὖ = τοῦτο ὑπὲρ οὖ. — τὸν...χρόνον. Cf. § 11, πάντα τὸν ἀλλον χρόνον. — καθ' ἔνα. Cf. IV, 20, καθ' ἑκαστον, note. — οὐτωσλ. Cf. IV, 11, οὕτω.

23. — On the Athenian, Spartan, and Theban Hegemonies, see I. 1-5. — οὐδὲ πολλοῦ δεῖ. H. 575, a, end; G. 172, N. 2 (b).

24. — ἀλλά...πολεμεῖν, but, on the one hand, against you, or rather the Athenians of that time, when they seemed to conduct themselves without due moderation toward some, all, even those who could bring no accusation against them, thought they ought to join with those unjustly treated in making war. — καὶ πάλιν: used instead of τοῦτο δὲ, to correspond to τοῦτο μὲν. — Λακεδαιμονίοις depends upon εἰς πόλεμον κατέστησαν, which = ἐπολέμησαν. — ἄρξασι: inceptive. — τὴν αὐτὴν δυναστείαν ὑμῖν, the same sovereignty with you; i.e., the same which you previously had. For ὑμῖν, see VI, 18, last note. — τὰ καθεστηκότα ἐκίνουν, were disturbing the established institutions or governments. I. 1.

25.—καὶ τί...ἀλλ': a favorite form of expression with D.; cf. § 59. The meaning is that the example of Athens and Sparta is of so much more importance than that of other states that it is not worth while to linger on the latter. The first half of § 24 refers to the Peloponnesian War; the second half to the Bœotian War, and possibly also to the Corinthian; the first part of § 25 to both, or all three. According, therefore, to D., the opposition of Sparta and Athens in the first of these wars was due to the desire of the former to redress wrongs committed by the latter against other states; in the other or others, to the reverse state of things. This is, of course, a highly rhetorical version of history. — αν έχοντες = εί καὶ αν είχομεν, although we should have been able (if asked). H. 803 b; G. 211. —  $\dot{\epsilon}\dot{\epsilon}$  dox  $\hat{\eta}$ s. Cf. § 15. —  $\dot{\nu}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho$   $\dot{\omega}\nu = \dot{\nu}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho$   $\tau o\dot{\nu}\tau\omega\nu$   $\hat{a}$ . —  $\tau \rho i\dot{a}$ κοντ' - έβδομήκοντα: convenient round numbers, instead of 29 and 73; cf. § 23. — ἐκείνοις. See IV, 17, ταύτας, note. — τρισί... ἔτεσιν, thirteen incomplete years, less than thirteen years. Why D. should date Philip's injustice from the year 354-3 rather than from the beginning of his reign, is not very clear. — ois =  $\hat{\epsilon}\nu$  oic. In a relative clause which has the value of an attributive adjective, a preposition common to both demonstrative and relative clauses is not usually repeated; cf. § 61,  $\delta\pi\delta\sigma\eta\varsigma$ . —  $\mu\hat{a}\lambda\lambda\rho\nu$  8è: cf. § 24 —  $\pi\epsilon\mu\pi\tau\rho\nu$ μέρος. In public suits (δίκαι δημόσιαι) the prosecutor who did not win a fifth of the votes of the dikasts was subjected to certain penalties. πέμπτον μέρος was, therefore, a legal phrase of common occurrence and much importance, and it may have passed into common life as an expression for a small part, like our tithe. This, however, is mere conjecture.

26.—"Ολυνθον, κ. τ. λ. I. 29. The Methone here referred to is usually supposed to have been situated on the Chalkidian peninsula.

— ἐπὶ Θράκης, on the borders of Thrace, i.e., on the Chalkidian peninsula, for which τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης is a standing designation.— ὥστε... είπεῖν, so that it is not easy for a visitor to say even whether they were ever inhabited. προσελθόντ agrees with τινα understood.— καλ...σιωπῶ, and I pass in silence over the extermination of the great (lit. so great) Phokian nation.— πολιτείας, constitutions.— τετραρχίας. I. 43.— κατέστησεν. Η. 706; Μ. 19, Ν. 4 (a).

27. — For historical allusions, see I. 41, 46, 47, 42, 40. — καὶ ταῦτα, and this. Cf. § 13, καὶ ταῦθ', note. Thebes and Athens hated tyrants; hence the force of this addition, καὶ ταῦτα...'Αθηνῶν. — "ἐμοὶ...βουλομένους." By this language Philip implied that he regarded as enemies those who were not willing to obey (ἀκούειν) him. To this implication ταῦτα in the next sentence refers. — καὶ οὐ...ποιεῖ, And he does not (merely) write this, but fail to carry it out by his deeds; or, And he does not write this without executing it. The first οὐ negatives the whole expression, γράφει μὲν ταῦτα, τοῦς δ' ἔργοις οὐ ποιεῖ. — ἦκεν. See IV, 34, ὄχετ', note. — ἡ βάρβαρος: sc. γῆ or χώρα. — χωρεῖ, is large enough for.

28. — ούτω... πόλεις, but we are so wretchedly disposed and trenched apart city by city; such is our wretched condition of political disunion. I. 62. — οὐδὲ — οὐδὲ, not even — nor even, different from οὖτε — οὖτε. H. 858, 859. — συστήναι, to band together.

29. — γιγνόμενον. H. 799; G. 279, 3. — τον χρόνον...ἐγνωκώς, each one resolved to make capital out of that time in which another is being destroyed. Such were the mutual jealousies of the Greek states and their blindness to the common danger that each expected to profit by another's loss. — ἐπεὶ introduces the justification of the implication contained in the words, οὐχ ὁπως...πράττων, that Greece is in danger. — περίοδος...κακοῦ. There seems to be here a mixture of similes. A περίοδος πυρετοῦ is a recurrence of an (intermittent) fever, and applies to the cases of those Greeks whom Philip had from time to time attacked. A καταβολὴ πυρετοῦ ἡ τωνος ἄλλου κακοῦ is an attack of fever or some other disease, and this comparison suggests the spread of an epidemic. — τῷ...ἀφεστάναι = τῷ νῦν δοκοῦντε πάνν πόρρω ἀφεστάναι. Account for D.'s arrangement of the words.

30.—Vote. Cf. IV, 12,  $i\sigma\theta$ , note.— $d\lambda\lambda$ ... $\lambda$ éque, at any rate ( $\dot{a}\lambda\lambda$ '  $\dot{o}\dot{b}\nu$ — $\gamma\varepsilon$ ) they were wronged by men who were lawful sons of Hellas, and one would have taken this in the same way as, if a son, lawfully born to a large property, had been managing it not altogether well nor rightly, one would have held that, so far as that itself went, he was worthy of blame and denunciation, but that it was impossible to say that he was acting thus without belonging to the family, or without being heir to this property. After  $\delta\sigma\kappa\varepsilon\rho$  are supply  $i\pi\epsilon\lambda\alpha\beta\varepsilon$ , on which  $\epsilon\dot{i}\nu\alpha a$  and  $\dot{\epsilon}\nu\varepsilon\dot{i}\nu\alpha a$  depend; cf. VI, 8,  $\delta\sigma\kappa\varepsilon\rho$  are  $\dot{\epsilon}$ i, note. Notice that in both this and the following sentence the verbs of the conditions are in the imperfect to denote continued action, those of the conclusions in the aorist to denote momentary action.  $\dot{\epsilon}\pi\sigma\dot{\epsilon}a$  is imperfect by attraction; cf. IV, 2,  $\pi\rho\sigma\sigma\eta\kappa\varepsilon$ , note. This effective comparison must not be interpreted too literally; Athens and Sparta had no rights of ownership which the other states recognized.

31. — ὑποβολιμαΐος. It was not uncommon in Greece for a childless wife to attempt to deceive her husband and others by taking another's infant and declaring it to be her own. See the references in L. & S. under ὑποβάλλω II, ὑποβολή 2, and ὑποβολιμαῖος. — ὑπὲρ = περὶ. Cf. IV, 1, ὑπὲρ ἀν, note. — οὐχ οὕτως. οὑχ repeats emphatically the οὐχ of the preceding line. — οὐ μόνον... Ἑλλησιν. D. consistently ignores the tradition which certified to the Hellenic lineage of the Macedonian kings (I. 11), and treats Philip as the representative of his people. Cf. Dem. iii, 16. — ἐντεῦθεν ὅθεν καλὸν ἐπεῖν (sc. εἰναι), from those regions from which it is honorable to say that one comes, from a place which can be named with honor. — ὀλέθρου. L. & S. δλεθρος II. — ὅθεν...πρότερον. For ὅθεν referring to Μακεδόνος, cf. H. 523 b. Probably the truth is that there had been few or no Macedonian slaves in Greece; which fact, honorable to the Macedonians, is ingeniously but falsely explained by D. as due to their worthlessness. Some, however, accept D.'s words literally.

- 32.—où belongs with each of the following questions.— $\pi \rho \delta \ldots$  dynphkéval, in addition to having destroyed cities.— $\tau \ell \theta \eta \sigma \iota$ , presides over. I. 36. Philip was present at the celebration of the games in 346, but, as our passage indicates, sent in 342 as his representatives Macedonian nobles, whom, as subjects of a king, D. contemptuously calls his slaves (cf. § 43,  $^*A\rho\theta\mu\nu\nu$  δοῦλον  $\beta a\sigma\iota\lambda \epsilon \omega \varsigma$ ).
- 33. For historical allusions, see I. 43, 41. τον δήμον τον Έρετριέων. ὁ Ἑρετριέων δήμος οι ὁ δήμος ὁ Ἑρετριέων means the Eretrian people, in distinction from the people of any other city; ὁ δήμος Ἑρετριέων means the popular party in Eretria, in distinction from the aristocratic party or the tyrants in the same city. Cf. H. 559 d. Thus, although in both cases δήμος means a commonalty, a mass having equal privileges, the former expression is the one naturally used when the place is the thing of importance, or, in other words, when the emphasis falls on the genitive. ταῦθ' is object of both ὁρῶντες and θεωρεῖν. ὁρῶντες. H. 800; G. 279, 1. εὐχόμενοι... γενέσθαι, each praying that it may not fall upon themselves. The idea is that the Greeks regard Philip's movements as being, like a hail-storm, beyond the sphere of their own control, as something to avert which they have no resource but prayer.
- 34. οὐ μόνον...ἀδικεῖται, And not only does no one take vengeance upon him in view of the insolent treatment which Greece receives at his hands, but not even for the wrongs which each suffers himself. Not only is there an absence of pan-Hellenic patriotism, but each state is too mean-spirited to redress even its own injuries. τοῦτο...ἐστιν. τοῦσχατον is to be taken as subject, τοῦτο as predicate, the idea being, for this is what the extreme, the climax of his insolence (implied above, § 32, τί τῆς ἐσχάτης ὕβρεως ἀπολείπει;) now amounts to, viz., that each individual is wronged, αὐτὸς ἐκαστος ἀδικεῖται. οὐ Κορινθίων, κ. τ. λ. The possessive genitives stand, for emphasis, at the head of their respective clauses. For the allusions, see I. 42, 43, 47, 45. The words καὶ νῦν...ὀντας, which break the rhetorical symmetry of the passage, are regarded by some as spurious, or as belonging in § 33, after καταστήσοντας. With συμμάχους ὄντας, understand ἑαντοῦ.
  - 35. βλέπομεν, we look askance, or suspiciously.
- 36.— λόγου, a reason.— ἐλευθέραν... ήττᾶτο, maintained Greece in freedom, and gave way to no battle on land or sea; i.e., did not waver before the dangers and hardships of war.— νῦν δ' ἀπολωλὸς, but which being now lost; or, according to the English idiom, but the loss of which now. Cf. Madvig's Lat. Gram. 426. — ἄνω καλ κάτω, upside down.

- 37. Έλλάδα: dependent equally upon ἀρχειν and διαφθείρειν, though taking the case required by the latter. τιμωρία μεγίστη. The receipt of bribes, δωροδοκία, was punished, according to circumstances, by a fine of ten times the amount received, confiscation of property, atimia, or death. Although susceptibility to bribes was always a weak point in the Greek character, Demosthenes is probably right in representing that in earlier times it had met with surer and severer punishment than in his own day. τοῦτον: i.e., τὸν δωροδοκοῦντα ἐξελεγχθέντα.
  - 38. τον...πραγμάτων, The opportunity, therefore, for each deed.
- 39. ὅσπερ...ἐκπέπραται, have been sold out of market, as it were; the market is exhausted of these commodities. ὑφ΄... Ἑλλάς, things through whose influence Greece is sick unto death (lit. is ruined and diseased). δῆλος...ἐπιτιμᾶ. The sense is: Nowadays, if a man has received a bribe, he is envied for his good fortune; if he unblushingly parades his guilt (as D. elsewhere accuses Philokrates of doing), it is treated as a joke; and if a rigid moralist here and there ventures to denounce the crime and the general indifference to it (τούτοις, neuter), he gets only ill-will for his pains. ἤρτηται, depend upon, follow from.
- 40. ἐπεὶ, for. The fact that in material resources the Greeks are better off now than in the time of the Persian Wars, is introduced as proof that present evils must be attributed to the moral causes just named. χρημάτων may depend on either  $\pi \lambda \bar{\eta} \theta o_{\xi}$  or  $\dot{\alpha} \phi \theta o \nu / \dot{\alpha}$ . τῆς ἄλλης κατασκευῆς: i.e., arms, engines of war, and the like. ἄπασι, all the Greeks. τῶν τότε =  $\dot{\eta}$  τοῖς τότε. H. 586 b.
- 41.—"Οτι...ἔχει, But for proof that these things are so. The clause is loosely prefixed, without grammatical dependence. τὰ νῦν, the present state of things. προσδείσθε, need in addition to the testimony of your own eyes. τὰ ἐν τοῖς ἄνωθεν χρόνοις may be regarded as a nominative, in which case see for its position, IV, 29, τοῦτ' ἀν, note, or as an accusative, the object of δηλώσω, by prolepsis. τἀναντία = ἐναντίως. ἀ...ἀκρόπολιν. Connect εἰς ἀκρόπολιν with κατέθεντο, εἰς στήλην with γράψαντες. For the omission of the article with ἀκρόπολιν, see H. 530 b.
- 42.—"Αρθμως. The case of Arthmius figures repeatedly in the Greek orators. It is used again by D. xix, 271, by Æschines iii, 258, and by Deinarchus ii, 24. It is also found in a passage of the rhetorician Aristeides (xiii, 189), on which an extant scholium comments, and is mentioned by Plutarch (Themistokles, 6). As far as can be made out, the facts, as understood by the orators, were these: Arthmius, of Zeleia in Troas, was, at the time of Xerxes' invasion, a temporary resident of Athens, and had been honored by an appointment as Athenian proxenus. Being, however, discovered in an attempt to bribe the Spartans with Persian gold, he was driven from Athens and declared an outlaw, and the sentence was recorded by an inscription set up on the acropolis. —  $\phi\eta\sigma\iota\nu$ : sc.  $\tau\grave{a}$   $\gamma\rho\acute{a}\mu\mu\alpha\tau a$ , the inscription. —  $\alpha\tau\mu\omega$ s. In the other quotations of this inscription by Demosthenes himself, by Æschines and by Deinarchus, this word,  $a\tau\mu\omega\varsigma$ , of which D. here makes so much, is not found. For its meaning, see below, § 44, note. —  $\chi\rho\nu\sigma\acute{o}\nu$  here =  $\chi\rho\nu\sigma\acute{o}\nu$ . —  $\tau\grave{o}\nu$  èk M $\eta\acute{o}\omega\nu$ . Cf. § 15,  $\tauo\grave{v}\varsigma$  èk.  $\sigma\tau\rho\alpha\tau\iota\acute{\omega}\tau\alpha\varsigma$ , note.

43.— τίς ποθ'. Cf. 'V, 35, τί δή ποτε, note.— η τί τὸ ἀξίωμα οτ rather what their sense of dignity.— δούλον βασιλέως. Cf. § 32, δούλονς, note.— ἐχθρὸν ει-ἀπίμους. Account for the change of number.

44. — The argument is as follows: The atimia to which Arthmius was condemned cannot have been that suspension from civil rights to which this name is ordinarily applied (see Dict. Antiq., ATIMIA): for this, to a mere metic, would have been no punishment at all. But there is another use of the word arimog, found in our ancient. Drakonian laws respecting homicide, where it signifies an outlaw. whom any one may kill with impunity. This then must be the sense in which the word is used in the inscription. — ήν...ἀτιμίαν, what one would call atimia in the usual sense of the word; mere ordinary atimia. Cf. L. & S. ούτως IV. —τί γὰρ τῷ Ζελείτη (sc. ἡν), For what mattered it to the Zeleian? - των 'Αθηναίων κοινών. τὰ κοινά signifies those rights which all citizens had in common. For the position of the phrase, see IV, 29, τοῦτ' ἀν γένηται, note. — ὑπέρ... δικάσασθαι, touching those for whom (if killed) it is not permitted to bring indictments for murder (against those who killed them).  $i\pi \hat{\epsilon} \rho$  $\dot{\omega}v=\dot{v}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho$  τούτων  $\dot{v}\pi\dot{\epsilon}\rho$   $\dot{\omega}v$ . Το δεδ $\ddot{\omega}$  supply as subject  $\dot{o}$  νομοθέτης; hedoes not permit. For δικάσασθαι, see H. 689 b, last example. — "καl ἄτιμος," φησί, "τεθνάτω." According to D.'s interpretation the quoted words apply to one who may be slain with impunity. For the redundant use of φησί, see L. & S. φημί, II, 3, end. Its subject is ό νομοθέτης understood. - τοῦτο...είναι, This, then, is the meaning (of the inscription), that the slayer of any one of them (Arthmius and his family) is free from blood-guiltiness. As to λέγει, supply τὰ ject, and make τούτων refer to those persons contemplated in the quoted law; but this is less satisfactory, because, first, the sentence would then contain nothing which is not implied in the preceding sentence, and, secondly, the argument in regard to the meaning of the word  $\dot{a}\tau\iota\mu\rho\rho$  in the inscription would not then be brought to a distinct conclusion.

45.—εί...διαφθείρει. This is a dependent question (εἰ=whether); hence the use of the pres. indic. If the clause were felt to be a condition, what would be the form of the verbs?—μη τοῦθ΄ ὑπολαμβάνουσιν (dat. of participle) = εἰ μὴ τοῦθ΄ ὑπελάμβανον, if they had not held this opinion.—αἴσθοιντο: sc. ἀνουμένους και διαφθείροντας.—τὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων. Cf. IV, 12, τὰ τῆς τύχης, note.

46.—  $\epsilon lm\omega$ . Cf. § 18,  $\phi \tilde{\omega}$ , note. If our text is correct, we may suppose that D. has in mind events like the recent acquittal of Æschines (I. 44), and that his questions are intended as suggestions of what he does not explicitly name. Then after pause, he turns in § 47 to the proofs of Philip's formidableness. Fr the common text, see the Appendix.

47. — εὐηθης λόγος, silly saying. — ὡς ἄρα, that really. The phrase is often used in quoting an opinion with which one does not agree. — οξ...ἀπάσης: an exaggerated way of describing the Lacedæmonian Hegemony, which extended over most of the Greek world. — βασιλέα ...είχον. Ι. 3. — ὑφίστατο...αὐτούς, and nothing withstood them; or, idiomatically, and whom nothing withstood. H. 818, Rem. d; G. 156. — ἀπάντων...ἐπίδοσιν, though almost everything has greatly improved. For ὡς ἐπος εἰπεῖν, see VI, 1, note.

48.—ἀκούω. Cf. IV, 17, φασιν, note. In fact, D.'s description of the way in which the Peloponnesian War was carried on is in all probability obtained from Thucydides.—τέτταρας...πέντε. This is given by D. as the period within which incursions might be undertaken, but the estimate is considerably too short. Eight months would be nearer the truth.—τὴν ὡραίαν αὐτήν, just during the summer-season.—ἀν—ἀναχωρεῖν. Η. 783, 704; G. 211, 206.—ὁπλίταις... στρατεύμασιν. Η. 604; G. 188, 5.—οὕτω...πολιτικῶς, and they were so old-fashioned, or rather, patriotic.—οὐδὲ, not even, emphasizes, not χρημάτων alone, but the whole clause.—χρημάτων. Cf. VI, 10, κέρ-δους, note.—τινα. Cf. VI, 30, τυς, note.

49. — ἀκούετε δὲ. The Athenians are sarcastically represented as knowing nothing about Philip's methods of warfare except by hearsay. — βαδίζονθ': supplementary participle to ἀκούετε. — ἀλλὰ τῷ... ἐξηρτῆσθαι, but by trailing at his heels, etc. In the military system perfected by Philip, the phalanx of hoplites, armed with large round shields and long spears, constituted the "central body of the national forces... Besides the phalanx, there existed as a separate division of the infantry, the species of troops called Hypaspistæ [here called by D. ψιλοί], who were probably more lightly armed and more loosely organized... The mountaineers were after their fashion employed to strengthen the military force, serving as light-armed troops and bowmen... Foreigners were used by Philip when they seemed to promise to be of advantage... Special attention was devoted by him to the cavalry. At its head was the proper place of the king, whose person was surrounded by a picked body of horsemen." Curtius, Hist. Greece, Vol. V, p. 50. Demosthenes may be here understood to mean that Philip's rapid marches were sometimes made without heavy-armed troops. — τοιοῦτον στρατόπεδον, an army, in a word, of this sort.

50.—ἐπὶ τούτοις, hereupon; or possibly the meaning may be, at the head of these troops.—νοσοῦντας ἐν αὐτοῖς, people suffering from domestic dissensions. Cf. § 12, νοσοῦσι.—ἀπιστίαν, distrust felt by the citizens toward one another.—ἐξίη, marches forth.—μηχανήματ'... πολιορκεῖ. The art of siege underwent great improvement in Philip's hands.—καὶ σιωπῶ...διαφέρει, And I pass over summer and winter, that it makes no difference; or freely, And I pass over the fact that it makes no difference to him whether it is summer or winter. Cf. what is said above, § 48; also IV, 31.—ἦν διαλείπει, which he omits, during which he rests. There seems to be no reason for considering διαλείπω in this and similar senses as intransitive, though this is the view of L. & S.

51. — μέντοι, however; i.e., although I do not enlarge upon them. — εὐήθειαν, simplicity; cf. § 48. — ἀλλ' ώς...διαγωνίζεσθαι, but as long as possible beforehand to secure yourselves by political measures and military preparations, intent upon preventing him from stirring from home, (and) not to engage with him in a close struggle. ὡς strengthens πλείστου. οὐχὶ modifles δεῖ understood; cf. IV, 39, ὅτι δεῖ, κτλ., where, however, the negative clause precedes. συμπλακέντας contains a metaphor from wrestling; see L. & S. συμπλέκω II, 2.

52.—ἀγειν καὶ φέρειν. Cf. IV, 34, ἀγων καὶ φέρων, note.— εἰς δὲ... ἤσκηται, but for a wrestling-match he is in better training than we. As distinguished from  $\pi \delta \lambda \epsilon \mu o \varsigma$ , which is here used of a war carried on at a distance, ἀγών means a struggle at close quarters, on Attic territory.

53. — οὐδέ. The force of μόνον still continues; and not only. — τῷ λονισμῷ καὶ τῆ διανοία, with reason and purpose, with mind and soul. — μισήσαι: Inceptive. — τοὺς: to be joined with ὑπηρετοῦντας.

54. - μωρίας ή παρανοίας. Cf. IV, 9, ἀσελγείας, note. - οὐκ ἔχω τί λέγω, I know not what to call it. Cf. § 4. - μή τι... έλαύνη, that some divinity is driving the state to ruin. Goodwin (M. p. 84) conjectures έλαύνει for έλαύνη; but the pres. subj. after a verb of fearing sometimes does not differ appreciably from the pres. indic. in meaning; e.g., Soph. Œd. R., 747; Eur. Medea, 317. - Aoidoplas... altías, for abuse, envy, scoffing, or whatever motive it may be. This use of TVYχάνω is to be explained as having grown out of an ellipsis of a participle to be supplied from the principal sentence (here κελεύοντες), so that the literal translation would be, for whatever cause you may happen to. Cf. IV, 46, ὅτι αν τύχητε. The genitives φθόνου and αἰτίας with ένεκα denote motives to be gratified; λοιδορίας and σκώμματος, objects to be secured. D. often rebukes the Athenian fondness for listening to scurrility, to which in his legal, though not in his parliamentary orations, he sometimes himself panders. — ώς οὐκ είσλ. Just as an infinitive after a verb of negative meaning commonly takes a μή which to us seems superfluous (H. 838; G. 283, 6), so a declarative sentence after such a verb may take an untranslatable οὐ; ἀρνηθεῖεν  $\mathring{a}$ ν  $\mathring{\omega}_{\varsigma}$  οὐκ εἰσὶ  $=\mathring{a}$ ρνηθεῖεν  $\mathring{a}$ ν  $\mathring{\mu}$ η εἶναι. D. probably has Philokrates in mind: cf. § 39, note.

55. — καλ ούχί...δεινόν, And this is not yet dangerous, although it is dangerous; And this, bad as it is, is not the worst; a favorite form of expression with D. — πολιτεύεσθαι, to shape the policy of the state; L. & S. πολιτεύω B, II, 1. — πὸ goes with ἐθέλειν.

56. — For facts, see I. 28, 29. — τῶν ἐν τοῖς πράγμασι, of the public men, of those engaged in public affairs; cf. § 2, τοὺς ἐπὶ τοῖς πράγμασιν. — Φιλίππου: pred. gen. after ἡσαν; some were on Philip's side. — οἱ τοῦ βελτίστου, the adherents of the best (i.e., the patriotic) cause. Most MSS. and editions omit οἰ. — πράττοντες. The clause ὁπως... πολίται depends upon πράττοντες. H. 756; G. 217; L. & S. πράσσω II, 7. — οἱ τὰ Φιλίππου φρονοῦντες, those who were partisans of Philip; cf. § 18, τἀκείνου φρονῆσαι. The article goes also with συκοφαντοῦντες and διαβάλλοντες. — ὄτ' ἦν ἡ πόλις, while the city existed.

57. — For facts, see I. 40, 41. — Οὐ...οὐδαμοῦ, Now not among these only...and nowhere else. — οἱ μὲν...πράγματα, some were trying to attach the state to you. ἡγον is imperfect of attempted action. — ἀκούοντες ...μάλλον (sc. ἡ ἐκείνων), But lending a readier ear in most matters to these (i.e., the latter). — τελευτώντες. H. 788, fine print; L. & S. τελευτάω II, 4.

58. — και γάρ τοι. See IV, 6, note. — σύμμαχος. Most editions read ὁ σύμμαχος, or ὁ σύμμαχος καὶ φίλος. The words are bitterly ironical.

— σώζεσθαι. As a passive, σώζεσθαι means (1) to be saved, (2) to be safe, to prosper, (3) to escape; as a middle, to save for oneself. Of these meanings, the last two are evidently inapplicable here. We may translate, he has twice already driven them (i.e., the phil-Athenian party), wishing to be rescued, out of the country, and interpret the words βουλομένους σώζεσθαι to mean that they wished to be saved from the dangerous political situation, from a tyranny supported by Macedonian arms.

59. — και τί...ἀλλ'. Cf. § 25, at the beginning. τὰ πολλὰ λέγειν = to speak of the great mass of cases, i.e., to go through the rest of the long list. — επραττε Φιλίππω, was working for Philip. — ταῦτ': i.e., ὅτι Φιλίππφ πράττουσιν. — Εὐφραῖος: sc. ἔπραττε, upon which the clause ὅπως...ἔσονται depends. Cf. above, § 56, πράττοντες, note. — ἄνθρωπος ...οίκήσας. The allusion to Euphræus's residence in Athens - where he is said to have been a disciple of Plato - is made with pride; the suggestion is that his love of liberty was acquired there. ουτος...δήμου, As to how this man was in other (lit. the other) ways insulted and foully wronged by the people, it would be possible to tell a long story. τὰ ἄλλα is cogn. obj. of the verbs which follow. For its position and that of  $o\dot{v}\tau o\varsigma$  before  $\dot{\omega}\varsigma$ , see IV, 29,  $\tau o\tilde{v}\tau'$   $\dot{a}v$ , note.  $\tau\dot{a}$ άλλα means the other wrongs besides the one about to be named. ἐνέδειξεν, indicted. — χορηγόν...πρυτανευόμενοι (sc.  $i\pi$   $ai\tau oi$ ), havingPhilip as their choregus and prytanis, i.e., acting under Philip's direction. — ἀπάγουσι. L. & S. ἀπάγω IV.

61. — ἀντί...ἀποτυμπανίσαι, instead of helping him (Euphræus) and cudgeling them (Philistides and his partisans) to death. — ἐπιτήδειον, deserving, in predicate agreement with τὸν. — ἐπ΄...ήβούλοντο, with as much freedom as they wished. For ὁπόσης, see § 25, οἰς, note. — κατεσκευάζοντο τὴν πράξιν, were maturing their scheme. — τῶν πολλῶν. Cf. IV, 29, τοῦτ' ἀν, note. — ἐσίγα καὶ κατεπέπληκτο, was silent and terror-stricken, was silent from terror. — Εὐφραῖον. Η. 726. — μεμνημένοι: plural, referring to τις. Η. 514 b. — ῥῆξαι φωνήν. L. & S. ῥῆγννμι I, 3. — διασκευασάμενοι, in battle array.

62.  $-\tau \eta \hat{s}$  πόλεωs depends on  $\delta \rho \chi o v \sigma \iota$  and  $\tau v \rho a v v o v \sigma \iota$ .  $-\tau o \hat{s} \ldots \mathring{o} v \tau a s$ , those who then rescued them and were ready to inflict any severity on Euphræus.  $\tau \delta \tau \epsilon$  refers to the time when Euphræus brought the indictment for treason above referred to;  $a \mathring{v} \tau o \mathring{v} \epsilon$  is an indirect reflexive, referring to  $o \mathring{\iota} \mu \grave{e} v$ , Philistides and his friends, whom the people saved by not supporting Euphræus.  $\tau o \mathring{v} \epsilon - \mathring{o} v \tau a \epsilon$  is distributed into  $\tau o \mathring{v} \epsilon \mu \grave{e} v$  and  $\tau o \mathring{v} \epsilon \delta \grave{e}$ , some and others; cf. VI, 11.

63. - Ti... exer, What in the world, then, is the cause, perhaps you wonder, of the fact that...were more favorably disposed. An infinitive depending upon αἴτιος may stand (1) without the article, or (2) in the genitive with τοῦ, or (3) in the accusative, as here, with τοῦ. ἐχειν refers to past time. — ὅπερ...ὅτι, It is the fact which with you also is the cause of the same conduct, the fact namely that; it is, as in your case also, the fact that. — οὐδὲ βουλομένοις, not even if they wish to. — πρὸς χάριν. See IV, 38, πρὸς ἡδουὴν, note. — οἱ δ'...συμπράττουσιν, but the others, in their very flatteries, coöperate with Philip. ἐν οἰς is probably to be understood as standing for ἐν τούτοις â. The clause οἰς χαρίζονται, being treated exactly like a substantive, has the intensive αὐτοῖς agreeing with it.

64. — είσφέρειν, to pay taxes; cf. IV, 7. — ἐκέλευον. The implied subject of this verb is οἱ ὑπὲρ τοῦ βελτίστου λέγοντες, which, in view of the following of d', would be regularly represented here by of μεν. The context, however, leaves no doubt as to who are meant, and a certain emphasis seems to be gained by the omission. Rather different are the cases where the sentence starts out with no intention of a contrast, but by an afterthought a clause with οἱ δὲ is added; e.g., Xen. Hell. 1, 2, 14, φχοντο είς Δεκέλειαν, οἱ δὲ εἰς Μέγαρα. — τάλλα... πάνθ'. The words τάλλα πάντα may be regarded as the object of some such word as ἐποίουν understood. H. 508 b. In the same way, I think, with everything else. — ἴνα...λέγω: cf. § 8, ἴν' ἐντεῦθεν ἀρξωμαι, note. - οἱ μέν are the same as the οἱ δ' above. - ἐφ' οἶς χαριοῦνται, by which (lit. on which) they would please. — πολλά...ένόμιζον, And many things at the last the people accepted, not so much for their own pleasure even nor on account of ignorance, as sinking in despair, since they thought that they were utterly ruined; i.e., at the last, seeing that their ruin was inevitable, they lost heart and let things take their course. πολλά καὶ τὰ τελευταῖα literally = many and the last things, or τὰ τελευταία may be used adverbially, at last. In place of οὐδὲ — οὐδὲ, most MSS. read οἴτε — οἴτε. For the difference, see § 28, note. πρὸς χάριν is generally interpreted, in order to please, i.e., out of complaisance toward the statesmen, but perhaps it is used in the sense given above in the translation: cf. H. 654 c, end. οἱ πολλοὶ means the people, as distinguished from the statesmen. and, but, is here used instead of ώς, αs, after οὐχ οὖτως; similarly we sometimes find οὐ μᾶλλον — ἀλλά. For τοῖς ὅλοις, see L. & S. ὅλος ΙΙ, 3.

65. — δ, κ. τ. λ. D.'s fear is that the Athenians in like manner will become disheartened and succumb. —  $\pi$ άθητε. L. & S.  $\pi$ άσχω III, 2. — ἐπειδάν...ἐνόν, when you know by careful consideration that nothing is in your power, that it is all over with you. ἐνειμι, in the sense to be possible is regularly followed by the simple dative, and the έν of our text is omitted by most MSS. and editions. — καίτοι...Φιλίππου, But now may affairs not come, men of Athens, to this pass (i.e., to a pass in which you can no longer do anything that will help you); but (if they should) it is better to die ten thousand deaths than to do anything in the way of fawning upon Philip. Expressions like τεθνάναι μυριάκις, milies perire, are common in Greek and Latin, while the combination of μυριάκις with κρεῖττον is inadmissible.

66. — καλήν γ΄...χάριν, a fine return have the masses of Oreos now received. γε adds emphasis to the ironical καλήν. — ἐώθουν, were repelling, strove against; a prolonged act, and hence expressed by the imperf. — μαστιγούμενοι και σφαττόμενοι, under the lash and the axe.

67. — τὰ τοιαῦτα, such things as the Oreites, Eretrians, and Olynthians hoped for, i.e., that no great harm would befall them. — τηλικαύτην — τὸ μέγεθος, so great in size. — ἄστε...πείσεσθαι, that in no event will you suffer severely. The phrase μηδ' ὰν ὁτιοῦν ἢ, literally, not even if anything whatever exist, occurs also, Dem. xix, 324; similarly, Dem. xviii, 168, οὐδ' εἴ τι γένοιτο, Plato, Krito, 49, C, οὐδ' ὰν ὁτιοῦν πάσχη, etc. δεινὸν πείσεσθαι is used here like δεινόν τι πείσεσθαι or δεινὰ πείσεσθαι.

68. — τίς...ποιῆσαι, Why, who would have expected these things to happen? Good Heavens, we of course ought to have done this and this, and not to have done this. For the tense of γενέσθαι, in place of which we should expect a future, see M. 23, 2, N. 3. γὰρ has not here in either sentence its causal value; for its use in questions, see IV, 10, γένοιτο γὰρ ἄν, note; for the meaning certainly in the second sentence, see Bæumlein, Griechische Partikeln, p. 70. For the use of τὸ, see H. 525 b; G. 143, 2. — νῦν and τότ' are emphatic by position. For τότ', see IV, 29, τοῦτ' ἀν, note.

69. — σώζηται, is safe; cf. § 58, σώζεσθαι, note. — ἄν τε — ἄν τ². Cf. § 16. — και ναύτην και κυβερνήτην, both sailor and pilot. In the use of ναύτην for ναύτας and in the omission of the article, the Greek expression may be exactly reproduced in English. — πάντ² ἄνδρα έξῆς, every man in order, i.e., without exception. — ὑπέρσχη, has broken over it.

70. — καὶ ἡμεῖς. Cf. IV, 41, καὶ ὑμεῖς, note. — ἔως ἐσμὲν σῶσι. The indicative is used here because the clause refers to the actual present case, whereas εως ἀν σώζηται above refers to an indefinite assumed case. Cf. G. 230, M. 59, with G. 233, M. 62. — τί...κάθηται, What shall we do? some one of the audience has perhaps long been wishing to ask. This is a rhetorical substitute for the natural conclusion, we must exert ourselves in like manner. The words ήδεως ὰν ἰσως ἐρωτήσων have been variously explained. (1) They may be the equivalent of δς ήδεως ὰν ἰσως ἐρωτήσει. The only objection to this is the rare occurrence in Attic writers of ἄν with future forms; see M. 37, 2, N. 1; 41, 4. (2) Some editors enclose the words ήδεως ὰν ἰσως in commas, and supply with them ἐρωτῶν οι τοῦτο ποιῶν, an explanation which seems forced and unnatural. (3) Others, without MS. authority, change ἐρωτήσων to ἐρωτήσες, so that the words = δς ήδεως ὰν ἰσως ἐρωτήσειε (or perhaps rather ἡρώτησε). — καὶ γράψω δὲ, and will move too. H. 856 b, end. — ἄν βούλησθε. Cf. IV, 30, ὰν ὑμὶν ἀρέσκη, note. — παρασκευαζόμενοι, preparing ourselves, a direct middle; in the next section παρεσκευαμένοι means having prepared for ourselves, an indirect middle. — λέγω, I mean.

71. — ταῦτα δη. The sentence, having been interrupted by the parenthesis, takes here a fresh start. δη is resumptive. — τοὺς ἄλλους: i.e., the Greeks of other states than Athens. — τοὺς ταῦτα διδάξοντας πρέσβεις; i.e., ambassadors who shall announce that we are ready and intending to resist Philip. For the construction, see § 11, τοὺς ἀπολογησομένους, note. — ἄν τι δέη. Cf. IV, 16. — εί δὲ μή... πράγμασιν, but if not, you may at any rate introduce delay into events. The idea is that Athens, by taking a firm and threatening attitude, can at least temporarily arrest Philip's movements, as in the case mentioned in the next section. For εἰ δὲ μή, where we should expect ἐὰν δὲ μή, see H. 754 b, fine print; M. 52, 1, N. 2.

72. — ἐπειδη...πόλεμος. The idea is that delay is much more valuable in dealing with an individual, subject to mortal accidents, than in dealing with a permanent, well-organized (συνεστώσα) state. οὐδὲ --οὐδ'. See § 28, note. -- τοῦτ', this particular measure for gaining time. — αί...Πελοπόννησον: sc. άχρηστοι έγένοντο. For the position of the attributive phrase,  $\pi \epsilon \rho i \tau \dot{\eta} \nu \Pi$ , see IV, 17, second note; for the historical fact, I. 42. — ας...περιήλθομεν. The relative has πρεσβείαι and κατηγορίαι as its antecedents. περιέρχεσθαι πρεσβείας is a regular illustration of the cognate accusative; and though there are no exact analogies for περιέρχεσθαι κατηγορίας, yet the combination περιέρχεσθαι πρεσβείας καὶ κατηγορίας does not seem a harsh one. The nouns may, in fact, be regarded as forming a hendiadys, the meaning being, accusatory embassies. — Πολύευκτος — Ἡγήσιππος: two adherents of the party of Demosthenes. ἐκεινοσὶ is used in pointing at a person present. — και ἐποιήσαμεν. In English we supply a relative: and by which we brought it about. Cf. IV, 35, έχει, note. - ἐπισχεῖν. Cf. IV, 1, ἐπισχών, note.

73.— λέγω, I propose. L. & S. λέγω B, 6. — αὐτοὺς ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν. Cf. IV, 24, αὐτὰ καθ αὐτὰ, note. — τοῖς μὲν...ποιεῖν. I. 46. — αὐτοὺς παρασκευάζεσθαι: like αὐτοὶ παρασκευάζόμενοι,  $\S$  70.

74. — Χαλκιδέας — Μεγαρέας. Chalkis and Megara were in alliance with Athens. I. 40, 41. — τὰ πράγματα, trouble. — ἀγαπητὸν (sc. ἐκείνοις ἐστί), they are content. — τοῦτο τὸ γέρας: i.e., the noble task of protecting Greece.

75. — δ βούλεται, what he likes, instead of his duty. — οὐδὲ μή ποθ' εὔρη. See IV, 44, οὐδὲποτ'...δεόντων, note. — δέδοικα ὅπως μὴ. Η. 743 a; G. 218, N. 1; M. 46, N. 2. — πάνθ' ἄμα, everything at once. Cf. VI, 6, πάντων ὁμοίως, IX, 69, πάντ' ἀνδρα ἑξῆς.

APPENDIX.

THE text of the Third Philippic exists in two different I forms, of which the one contains a number of passages of considerable length which are omitted in the other. shorter form is that of the manuscripts called \(\Sigma\) and \(\L\), which are preserved respectively at Paris and Florence, and are generally considered the best; the other and longer form is that of the other manuscripts. Opinions vary widely as to the origin of these differences, some scholars holding all or part of the passages in question to be genuine and to have been only accidentally omitted from \(\Sigma\) and \(\L\), others regarding them as pseudo-Demosthenic interpolations in the inferior manuscripts; while still another view, perhaps the most probable, is that they are from the hand of Demosthenes, but were omitted by him in the final recension of the oration. The text of this edition, being based upon that of  $\Sigma$ , gives the briefer form. The principal additions contained in the vulgate are the following: -

Goodwin's Greek Grammar.

By WILLIAM W. GOODWIN, Ph.D., Eliot Professor of Greek Literature in Harvard College. Revised and Enlarged Edition. Published in December, 1879. 12mo. Half morocco. 425 pages. Mailing Price, $1.65; Introduction, $1.50; Allowance for old book, 50 cents.

THE object of this Grammar is to state general principles clearly and distinctly, with special regard to those who are preparing for college.

In the new edition many important changes have been made. The part relating to the inflection of the Verb has been entirely rewritten, and increased from fifty to one hundred pages. Part III., on the Formation of Words, has been added in this edition. Part V., on Versification, is almost entirely new, and follows to great extent the principles of J. H. H. Schmidt's Rhythmic and Metric. The other parts, especially the Syntax, have been thoroughly revised, and numerous additions have been made. The Catalogue of Verbs has been greatly enlarged, and each verb is now referred to its proper class in the classification of G. Curtius. which is adopted in the Grammar itself. The sections on the Syntax of the Verb are generally condensed from the author's larger work on the Greek Moods and Tenses, to which advanced students, and especially teachers, are referred for a fuller exposition of many matters which are merely hinted at in the Elementary Grammar.

This new edition has been published also by Macmillan & Co. in London, and is commended by British authorities as "the best Greek Grammar of its size in the English language."

Martin L. D'Ooge, Professor of | and clearly. Its treatment of the in-Greek in the University of Michigan: | flection of the verb is especially skil-The Grammar, it seems to me, hits ful and clear. I know of no Greek the exact mean between a book of grammar for English-speaking stureference and a bare outline. It dents that combines so many merits gives results concisely and yet fully in so attractive a form.

Seymour's School Iliad.

With Introduction, Commentary, and Illustrated Vocabulary, by THOMAS D. SEYMOUR, Professor of Greek in Yale College.

Books I.-III. Square 12mo. Half-leather. 371 pages. Mailing price, $1.35; for introduction, $1.25; allowance, 30 cents.

Books I.-VI. 478 pages. Mailing price, $1.75; for introduction, $1.60; allowance, 40 cents.

THIS is believed to be without exception the ideal Iliad for school use. The introduction, which contains forty-five pages, presents, in a concise but systematic form, the most important facts regarding Homeric life, the Homeric poem, Homeric style, syntax, dialect, and verse. The text is printed in the large and clear type that has distinguished the College Series of Greek Authors. The commentary has been adapted to the wants of beginners in Homer. The notes are copious for the first three books. They are less copious for Books IV. to VI., but the commentary on Book VI. is fuller than that on Books IV, and V. One finds numberless evidences that the editor did his work not only in a careful and in a painstaking and scholarly way, but with personal pleasure and with sympathetic regard for the difficulties of beginners. The vocabulary described below contains more than twenty wood-cuts, most of which are new in this country.

publisher seem to me to have done their best to furnish a positive and valuable help to an easy and adequate preparation for college work in Greek poetry, and thus to have made a notable contribution to the cause of classical learning.

Angie Clara Chapin, Prof. of Greek, Wellesley Coll .: It seems to me particularly rich in what may be called literary apparatus. With such a guide a teacher will have no excuse for teaching the Iliad as merely "a queer kind of prose," as Professor Seymour says. (Dec. 16, 1889.)

William Goodell Frost, Prof. of Greek Language and Literature,

A. H. Buck, Prof. of Greek, Boston | Oberlin, Coll.: The Introduction is Univ.: In this book both editor and admirable for its selection of material, and sound in the views expressed. Of course the Vocabulary is a feature which appeals at once to every student of Homer. I observe at random through both Vocabulary and notes numerous felicities which reveal conscientious and loving care. I can hardly see how the volume as a whole could be improved.

> Charles Forster Smith, Prof. of Greek, Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.: I do not doubt that it will be universally conceded to be the best school edition of any part of the Iliad that has yet been put on the American market. I shall recommend Professor Seymour's Iliad to all the schools that fit boys for us.

W. A. Robinson, Prof. of Greek, Lehigh Univ.: It seems to me to be easily first of all American editions.

Alexander Kerr, Prof. of Greek, University of Wisconsin: My impression upon receiving a copy of Seymour's Iliad was that Ginn & Company had surpassed themselves, if that were possible. Seymour's fliad in its present form has in my opinion no competitor, and, of course. I shall recommend it to my classes in elementary Greek.

Robert Sharp, Prof. of Greek, room that have come into my hands. leaves nothing to be desired.

R. B. Youngman, Prof. of Greek, Lafayette College: It is the best of all. From cover to cover it speaks the praise of editor and publisher. The thing that pleases me most is the abundant, but not burdensome. quotation from Virgil, Horace, Milton, and the Bible, showing similarity of thought, expression, habit, and experience. This cannot fail to add much interest to the study of Homer.

John B. Kieffer, Prof. of Latin and Greek, Franklin and Marshall College: The introduction and the notes are precisely what the student Tulane University, La.: The Sey-needs, and not least amongst the exmour's Iliad I regard as much the cellences of the book is the judicious best, both for convenience and for care that has been exercised in exthe judicious help afforded the stu- cluding things the student does not dent, of all the editions for the class-need. # Homeric Vocabulary.

A Concise Vocabulary to the First Six Books of Homer's Iliad. By Thomas D. Seymour of Yale College. Square 12mo. Cloth. x+105 pages. Mailing price, 80 cents; for introduction, 75 cents.

SPECIAL Vocabulary to Homer is open to little objection, if any, since the words are found nearly in their original significations and constructions. Its advantages are obvious.

This Vocabulary has not been compiled from other dictionaries, but has been made from the poem itself. The maker has endeavored to give nothing but what is important for the accurate and appreciative reading of the Iliad, and yet to show the original and derived meanings of the words, and to suggest translations which should be both simple and dignified.

Language and Literature, Illinois mostly imaginary, if I may judge Wesleyan University: The vocabu- from thirteen years' experience in lary, I think, is a move in the right the class-room. What is needed is direction, —toward saving students something that will give what a stua needless waste of time. # Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek

Verb

Rewritten and Enlarged. By William Watson Goodwin, LL.D., Eliot Professor of Greek Literature in Harvard University. 8vo. Cloth. xxxii + 464 pages. Mailing Price, $2.15; Introduction Price, $2.00.

PERHAPS no other work of scholarship has enjoyed the unique and unchallenged preëminence of Professor Goodwin's Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek Verb. Published both in England and in America, it has long been the standard for the English-speaking students of two continents.

It is only necessary to say of the new edition that it is a most careful revision and a judicious enlargement of the previous one. Full use has been made of all contributions, American and foreign, to the discussion of the subjects here treated, as well as of the author's own further investigations and maturer judgments.

The work is presented as something indispensable to all students and teachers of Greek.

A copy of the Table of Contents, which contains twenty-two pages, will be sent to any teacher who desires to see the scope of the work. Letters endorsing the work in the strongest terms and emphasizing its practical value have been received from the most eminent scholars, both American and British, but the publication of recommendations would be superfluous.

Selections from Xenophon and Herodotus.

With Notes adapted to the revised edition of Goodwin's Greek Grammar, and copperplate maps. Edited by W. W. Goodwin, Ph.D., LL.D., Eliot Professor of Greek Literature, and John WILLIAMS WHITE, Ph.D., Professor of Greek in Harvard College. 12mo. Half-morocco. vii + 397 pages. Mailing Price, $1.65; for introduction, $1.50.

Greek Inflection.

By B. F. Harding, Head Master of the Belmont School, Belmont, Mass. 12mo. Cloth. 54 pages. Mailing price, 55 cts.; for introduction, 50 cts.

DESIGNED to economize time for the teacher, by furnishing a large number of words for ready use, as paradigms, in the class-room, and at the same time to suggest a systematic and seientific treatment of the noun and verb.
